St. John's International Exhibition

One of the Most Successful Exhibitions in the History of the Maritime Provinces—An Average Daily Attendance of 14,000—Features of Canadian Agricultural and Industrial Life Admirably Represented—Some of the Leading Exhibits.

St. John's big international exhibition closed Saturday, Sept. 19, after one of the most successful weeks in the history of exhibitions in this province. Official figures for attendance were given at 69,-784. The exhibition opened on Sept. 12 and during the week the average daily attendance totaled 14,000. Public patronage was well satisfied and a particularly pleasing part of the show was the entire absence of rowdyism. The crowd was a most polite one, and it is indeed commendable to the management that not a single accident occurred throughout the whole week. To manager R. H. Arnold and his staff of capable assistants must be given all the credit for the success of the exhibition. Mr. Arnold was ably assisted in the task of successfully swinging a big fair by S. M. Wetmore, assistant manager and John T. Gleeson, secretary. The others in the office staff included Miss King, Miss Burnham and James McKenney.

Every feature of Canadian life, agricultural, industrial, educational, or artistic was covered by the exhibition. Some of the most attractive and most visited of the exhibits are illustrated and engraved herewith.

The Dixie Exhibit.

The Dixie exhibit had a very conspicuous position on the right of the main entrance, well placed for the view of the public. The trimmings were of bright green and white cheese cloth, pleated and rosetted on all the edges, making a very pretty effect. The counter was of stained hemlock with a glass front, showing a fine stock of cigars and tobaccos. In the background there was a shelf with cigarettes, cigars and cut tobacco. The way in which the stock was arranged was a study in itself. The great feature of this exhibit was the "Mysterious Mr. Dixie," who continually kept the public on the go. The finder of Mr. Dixie, if he or she carried a certain premium which had to be secured at the booth, entitled the party to a new $10 bill. Mr. Dixie was captured on the day before the exhibition closed. A wonderful automatic smoking doll which smoked by itself all day on the counter has never yet failed to draw a crowd. A gramaphone also served to attract public attention to the booth, but the prettiest part of the exhibit was the electric light effect of thirty-five lights, twenty-four of them continually flashing. The arranging of the stock and tending to the booth was in care of J H C MyIntyre, the Dixie agent in this district and his valuable lady assistants.

ST. JOHN EXHIBITION—Exhibit of the Dixie Cigar.

ST. JOHN EXHIBITION—Dyola Exhibit.

DY-O-LA.

Most pleasing indeed was the excellent display made by the Johnson-Richardson Co., Limited, Montreal, represented by A. J. Lawrence, of Dy-o-la, the new and improved home dye, also the Dy-o-la laundry blueing in sheets and Dy-o-la ink powders, samples of which were cheerfully distributed and all of which met with the approval of the public in general. This firm had a splendid booth situated on the south eastern corner of the main building and all of their respective lines were practically demonstrated by Mr. Lawrence and a competent assistant. This enterprising firm has been established for 3½ years and up to the present have an exceptionally large connection with all drug and general stores throughout the Dominion. This splendid connection has been established mainly through the energy and enterprise of the directors and future success is assured. The firm also had a very attractive booth at the Halifax exhibition.

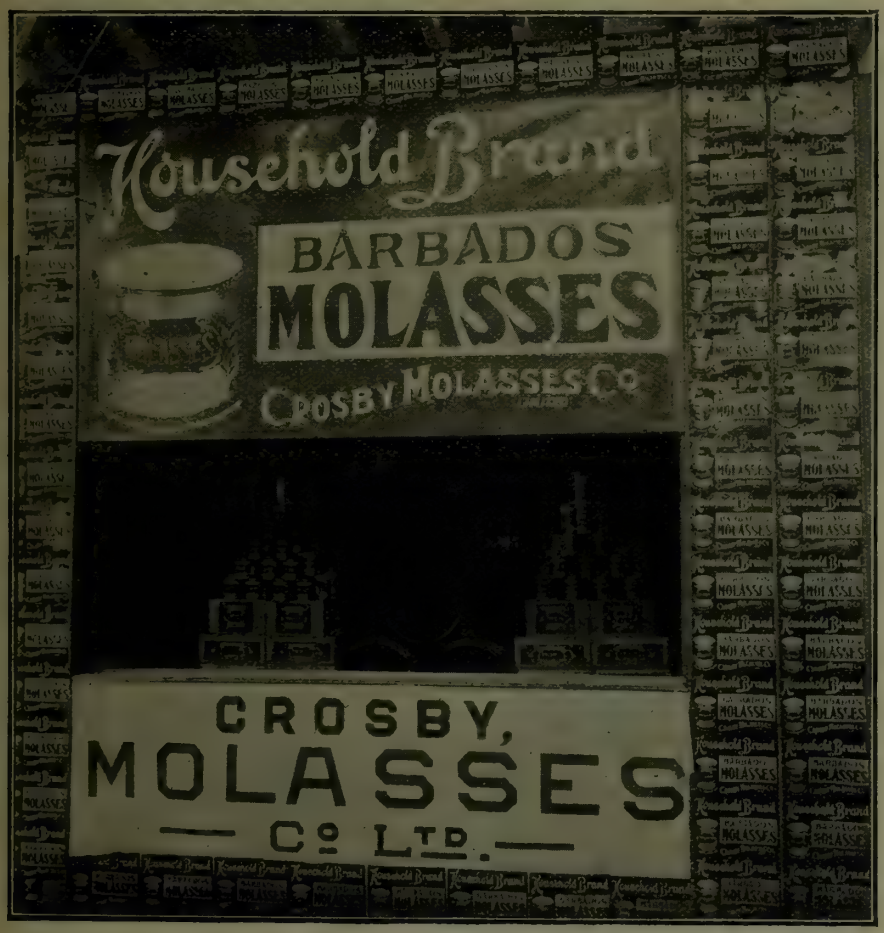
THE CROSBY MOLASSES CO., LTD.

There were many pretty displays at the St. John exhibition, but there was one which looked as if infinite care had been taken to make it as perfect as man could from a common sense business standpoint. That was the booth occupied by the Crosby Molasses Co., Limited, St. John, N.B. The booth was situated near the main aisle on entering the fair building and thousands of visitors called during the course of the fair and secured a small sample tin of the firm's extra fancy Barbados "Household Brand" molasses. Mr. Fred Crosby and two valuable assistants were kept busy at all times demonstrating as well as possible the points of interest in their well known brand of molasses. This firm are putting up at the present time a very nice, pure fancy Barbados molasses in 3, 5 and 10-pound tins. This molasses is produced from pure Barbados cane juice and is not mixed in any way. Some of the advantages to be derived by securing or handling molasses put up in cans are as follows: 1st, The molasses is all strained, and there is no dirt or sediment; 2nd, A grocer has to go to no time or trouble in selling; 3rd, From a consumers' standpoint, it is always in a convenient package to keep in a pantry; and last, but not least, it will not spoil or deteriorate in the cans. The Crosby Molasses Co., Limited, is one of the largest direct importers of molasses in Canada, and is prepared to deal with the trade in a large way on the very best of terms. The president of the company, L. G. Crosby, has been identified with the molasses business for over twenty-five years and is a master of the buying and selling of this important commodity. Fred S. Crosby, the secretary-treasurer of the company, is an enterprising young man and the whole of his time is devoted strictly to the interests of the business.



ST. JOHN EXHIBITION—Exhibit of the Crosby Molasses Co.

CANADIAN BILLS OF LADING.

A. A. Ayer, of A. A. Ayer & Co., has been appointed on a committee with J. S. N. Dougall and R. Wilson Reford to inquire into the advisability of having Canadian bills of lading for ships. The shipping protection societies of England, have pronounced in favor of eliminating from the bills of lading features which are objectionable to Canadian shippers. It was in view of co-operating with these British societies that the Council of the Board of Trade appointed the committee named. A circular was read at the meeting of the Council, from the Decimal Association of London, disputing the rumor that the decimal system had failed to accomplish its purpose in France. Further, it stated that the results achieved were so satisfactory as to render its position impregnable.

WHAT PUZZLED HIM.

A man was standing on the foot-path in one of the main streets of a northern town the other day, gazing at a hoarding which displayed the well-known advertisement representing a bull gazing at a bottle of Bovril, and bearing underneath the inscription, "Alas, my poor brother." He remained there gazing at the hoarding while the policeman on duty completed the round of his beat twice. At last the guardian of the peace approached him.

"Move on, there," said he. "You're obstructing the thoroughfare."

"Eh," queried the man.

"Move on," roared the policeman. "What are you standing there staring at?"

"Look there," replied the obstructor of thoroughfares, pointing at the advertisement. "Now what I want to know is, how can it be a lass if it's his brother?"—Tit-Bits.

NORVAL MILLER PASSES AWAY.

Robt. Noble, Who Had Built up a Successful Business Died on Monday.

One of Ontario's prominent millers passed away on Monday in the person of Robert Noble, of Norval. Mr. Noble was born at the Howe Mill, Cumberland, Eng., and came to Canada in the early fifties. He began work at the old Wentworth Mills at Dundas, and after three years' service was sent to a new steam mill at Elora. At the end of three years the mill changed hands, and Mr. Noble went to Freelton, and after six years' successful work here he took a three years' lease of the mill. In 1868 he purchased the Norval Mills, which he has since conducted with a large measure of success. Mr. Noble was a member of the Toronto Board of Trade and the Dominion Millers' Association, and was also a director of the Farmers' Bank of Canada, the Canadian Millers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Hamilton, and has been a trustee of the Norval Public School for the past 25 years. He is survived by his widow, two sons, Maj. A. L. Noble, of Norval and Dr. R. T. Noble, of Toronto, and two daughters. Of late years Mr. Noble has done considerable export business, the product of his Norval mills meeting with considerable success.

AN ALMOND PASTE PLANT.

W. P. Downey, 24 and 26 St. Peter St., Montreal, has just completed the installation of a modern almond paste plant, which is now in smooth running order. The machinery is the most up-to-date, having been brought to Canada from Europe, where it was specially made, and the plant as it stands to-day is unique in Canada. Mr. Downey has in charge of this department one of the most expert chemists in the country.

Market Changes in New Brunswick—Large Shipments of Potatoes to Havana —Arrivals of West Indian Products in Halifax.

ST. JOHN.

September 28.—Several important changes have been recorded in the markets during the past week or two and the prospect for this fall's business is that a higher level of prices will prevail on staple articles than for some years.

There has been almost a flour famine in St. John during the past three weeks. The strike on the C.P.R. has interfered with shipments coming forward, and it has been a very difficult matter for some of the merchants to fill orders as promptly as they would wish. It has been especially hard to procure sufficient of certain brands of Manitoba's, as the millers have been unable to get stock forward from the mills in Manitoba to Montreal, owing to bush fires on the line of railway, which resulted in the loss of two bridges and which tied up traffic at Fort William. The line, however, is now clear and the railroad is rushing all shipments forward so that there will be plenty of flour in about a week. The great export demand for wheat has prevented any lower prices on Manitoba patents. All grades of Ontario's advanced 15 cents on September 4, and a further advance is anticipated by the local dealers.

Oatmeal has advanced 10 cents a barrel, and the millers advise that there will be a further advance in the near future.

The sugar market has shown considerable strength during the past week, New York refiners having advanced 10 cents per hundred pounds on all grades. The raw market shows a further advance of 8 cents per hundred pounds, and still higher prices are looked for.

The molasses market is strong. Hogsheads of fancy Barbadoes are quoted at 38 cents, tierces at 40 cents, and barrels at 41 cents.

Pork is very high, an advance of $2.25 per barrel having taken place this month. The best clear backs are quoted at $25 a barrel. A further advance is looked for, as there is a great shortage of hogs, and the outlook is that all pork products will be higher. Pure lard is advancing with pork, and the price asked now, 14½ cents for tubs, is higher than ever before. Compound is a little easier.

The first shipments of Canadian onions have arrived and are being offered in 75-pound bags.

Cheese is very high and is expected to go still higher. The price asked now is 14 to 14½ cents for good stock.

Eggs and butter continue very high, the quotations being considerably in excess of other years at this time.

Great quantities of Nova Scotia apples are arriving daily in schooners. Gravensteins are very plentiful and are selling from the vessels at $1.75 to $2 for No. 1, and $1.10 to $1.25 for No. 2.

Record shipments of potatoes are being made from Carleton County.

Seven thousand cases of sardines were lost at Lubec, Maine, on Wednesday last, when the floor of the Lubec Sardine Company's warehouse collapsed and allowed them to slide into the water. There were 21,000 cases of the fish all without covers, but two-thirds of the goods did not go into the water. The loss on the sardines is placed at $6,000 and the damage to the building $1,000.

The F. E. Williams Company, of this city, is sending a large shipment of potatoes to Havana, Cuba, by the next trip of the steamer Talisman from this port.

A number of schooners are bringing the potatoes from Nova Scotia. In all about 1,000 barrels are being stored here ready to go forward.

Exhibitions were held last week at Sussex and Woodstock, and were largely attended. A good class of exhibits were shown in industrial, agricultural and live stock departments.

G. W. Green, of Hartland, has disposed of his stock of general merchandise to Ziba Arcer.

HALIFAX.

September 28.—All branches of the grocery business are now very active and the commission men have about all the trade they can handle. Plums have been more plentiful during the past week than was expected, and sales were heavy, though prices were high. Pears are plentiful, and are selling at $4 per barrel. Crabapples are abundant, but they are very slow sellers. The quality of Gravenstein apples now coming on the market is very fine. The stock is free from blemishes, nicely colored and the price is reasonable. The best No. 1 stock can be purchased for about $2.50, No. 2's from $1.50 to $1.75, and No. 3's from $1 to $1.25.

Train loads of apples are rolling into the city daily and large shipments are being made to the British market. Over thirty thousand barrels were shipped from this port during the past week. The steamer Halifax City, sailing for Liverpool took 17,099 barrels (a record cargo for one ship), and the Furness liner Kamawha took nearly 15,000 barrels. According to advices received here, prices rule low in London, but there is a good market in Liverpool. In the latter market Gravensteins are quoted at from 22 to 25 shillings, Fallawaters at 23 shillings, Alexanders at 20 shillings, and choice Kings up to 29 shillings.

A. L. Phillips, the representative in Nova Scotia of Lever Bros., of Sunlight soap, is in Sydney this week completing arrangements by which in the future Halifax will be the only distributing point in Nova Scotia. The stock in the company's warehouse in Sydney will be immediately shipped to Halifax.

Green tomatoes are in good supply and there is a heavy demand. They are quoted at 70 cents per bushel.

The West India line steamer Amanda arrived here this week from Jamaica and Turk's Island. She has a large cargo including about one thousand barrels of oranges, cocoanuts and other fruits to land here. The orange season is now fairly started in Jamaica and for some time to come the West India line boats will carry large quantities of fruit to this port.

Heavy exports of potatoes continue from this port. The steamer Pors, sailing yesterday, for Havana, took 6,400 barrels of stock grown in the Annapolis Valley. The potato trade between Nova Scotia and Havana is increasing every year.

Dairy butter is now coming in more plentifully and is quoted at from 22 to 24 cents. The commission here freely expresses the opinion that Nova Scotia farmers do not produce sufficient butter. There is a good market for all that they can produce. Creamery butter is quoted from 27 to 30 cents, and the supply is just about equal to the demand.

Notwithstanding the fine mild weather the receipts of eggs are small. They should be more plentiful under the very favorable conditions for laying. Case stock is quoted at 23 cents, and fresh laid from 25 to 27 cents.

MONTREAL.

September 30.—Many stores about town have their windows decorated with large bouquets of flowers which is exceptionally attractive. One store has potted ferns and palms on both sides and at the back of its display. This touch of green plant life makes a very effective border for a display of canned goods, which are labelled in brilliant colors. Demers' meat and provision store, Notre Dame Street, also presents a very creditably dressed window this week. Different colored vegetables and fruits are worked into a very pleasing design.

H. C. Smith, corner Esplanade Avenue and Villaneuve Street Annex, has found a new position in which to place attractive pictures that he receives with his goods. He has arranged these in a circle around the ceiling where they show off to good advantage and are not in the way.

A singular distinction has been conferred upon Henri Jonas, of Montreal. At a recent meeting of the Chamber of Commerce he was presented with a diploma, creating him Commander of the Order of Nichan Iftikhar, by the French Republic. Mr. Jonas came to America many years ago, and settled in Montreal, where he engaged in the manufacture of flavoring extracts. Since then he has met with a large measure of success, both in business and social life. He is a member of the Board of Trade, the Chamber of Commerce of the district, and has been President of the French Chamber of Commerce from 1900 to 1904.

His name appears in the membership of all the prominent French clubs and societies of the city. It is in recognition of his services to the French Chamber of Commerce, as well as his deep personal interest in the well-being of his compatriots, that he has been singled out for this distinction.

A rather good story concerning the difficulties of a local grocer who had placed his business on a cash basis, after having given credit for a number of years, was related to a representative of The Grocer a few days ago. The grocer said: "One day a lady whom I knew was quite able to pay her debts, came in and asked me to trust her for something, which she had first inquired the price of, and without saying anything, I smiled and pointed my finger at the sign reading 'No Credit Given,' at the same time, however, drawing from my pocket the price of the article which she desired. During this time all of my clerks were interested spectators and were wondering whether I would waver or not. The lady, who was a sensible woman, saw the point and accepted my personal loan to pay for the goods which she required. I accompanied her to the door and explained in a voice inaudible to the clerks, that I was obliged to practice a rule which I had enjoined my staff to put in force. She laughed and never afterwards forgot to bring her purse."

Vancouver Grocers' Association Elects New Officers—Local-Grown Oysters Finding Favor in British Columbia Markets.

VANCOUVER.

September 26.—The Vancouver Retail Grocers' Association has elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, Luther McTaggart; Vice-President, W. Clark; Treasurer, T. J. Hunter; Secretary, W. J. C. Hunter; Directors, George Hobson, W. H. Walsh, Frank Wright, Thomas H. White, F. Welsh; Auditors, F. McDowell and John Kyle.

Local grown oysters are now on the market here and are giving the best of satisfaction. They are even bigger than the imported, and have a flavor which is indigenous to Pacific coast shell fish, and which is preferred by most people. The oysters were imported when quite small by the Crescent Oyster Company, composed of Vancouver men, and planted in the salt water at Mud Bay, just north of the international boundary line. This is the first lot to appear here, and from present indications it looks as if the venture will be a success. This is not the first Pacific coast oyster that has been sold here. The Drayton Harbor Oyster Company, of Bellingham, has been placing them on the market here for some time, and when they are ordered on the shell very few people know that they are getting Pacific coast bivalves. B. W. Huntoon, superintendent of the company at Bellingham, was in the city this week, and in speaking of the peculiar flavor found in the oyster here, said that an Eastern oyster man declared that for that reason the ones grown on this coast surpassed those of the Atlantic.

Local fruit is now on sale in all grades and quantities. Grapes from California are about the only thing from the South that is in favor at present, with perhaps the exception of onions. Good onions are grown in the dry belt of British Columbia and in Chilliwack district, on the lower mainland, but the quality of the onion grown in the wetter districts is a little off. Most of the onions grown in the interior are shipped out of the Province, and the local supply is hardly enough to meet the demand. On Vancouver Island, good onions are also grown, and while Californias are on the market, they do not have that hold that they otherwise would if there were no producing districts in the neighborhood of the large cities.

LUTHER McTAGGART,

President-Elect Vancouver Retail Grocers' Association.

Hon. W. T. Finlay, Minister of Agriculture for Alberta, was in the city this week and gave some interesting information in regard to the large amount of butter brought from Alberta to supply the demand in British Columbia. About $100,000 worth is imported annually, and he pointed out that not only might this be circulated here, but this Province might also enter into competition with Alberta in the butter trade of the north and in Japan. "Great success has attended the Government creameries in Alberta," Mr. Finlay said, "and a much larger amount of butter has been turned out this year, though the amount is nothing like it would be if all the farmers took advantage of the creameries. We find good customers in British Columbia and Japan. We get a good price for the article, but it is in so much demand that we could sell many times as much more if we could get the cream. This will be the best year for price, which now averages 26c clear to the farmer. In British Columbia and the north we sell annually $100,000 worth, and the quality is recognized as being about as good as that produced anywhere." British Columbia ought to make a good creamery country, he remarked. In this connection, on the lower mainland of British Columbia and on Vancouver Island, the creameries were a decided success, but in the dry belt, where the growth of grass and fodder is not so good, and where there are colder winters, the creameries have not done so well.

The fruit and vegetable cannery at Kelowna is now in full operation, and will have a considerable output for consumption in the Province.

PERSONAL NOTES.

Fred Hughes, Montreal, is off on a fishing expedition.

Harold H. Hughes, of Fred Hughes & Co., Montreal, has returned from the Ottawa Fair where he was in the interests of Spratt's Dog Foods, for which the firm are agents.

W. H. Millman, of Millman & Sons, Toronto, was in Western Ontario last week on a business and pleasure trip and acted as judge in some of the horse classes at the London and St. Thomas fairs.

S. J. Mathewson, Mathewson's Sons, Montreal, left on Tuesday on a ten days' shooting trip. He will spend the better part of the holiday in the neighborhood of Little Metis, Que., where is located his summer home. There will be danger in the air for ducks during the next week.

Fruit Jars Scarce in Different Parts of Province—A Scheme for Retail Collections From St. Catharines— St. Thomas Grocers Win at Horse Show.

ST. CATHARINES.

Sept. 30.—Farmers here at last begin to realize that potatoes are grown in other sections of the Dominion as well as in the Niagara district, some being offered here last week at 60c per bushel. This drop, from the high prices that have been ruling was due to the fact that two carloads have been received and distributed to the trade by a local wholesale house. The potato crop in this section is a failure, but with large offerings from other parts of the country prices will be about the same as last year.

The stock of fruit jars is exhausted. Both retailers and wholesalers are glad. Heavy stocks were purchased in 1907 but sales were small, leaving large supplies on the retailers' hands. These have now been turned over at a profit much to the grocers' satisfaction.

W. Buchanan, baker and confectioner, on James St., was compelled to close on Saturday. At this writing it cannot be learned whether an assignment has been made or not. This is the second failure to record in this month. The other being Geo. Thomas, proprietor of the Thomas Cafe, and the Paris Candy Kitchen.

Grocers, as a rule, are poor collectors and those of this city seem to be no exception to the rule. The writer has had in mind a suggestion for overcoming this weakness and offers it here for consideration. Some grocers are opposed to associations but this plan can be worked on its own merits. Call a meeting of all retail merchants, appoint a secretary, treasurer and executive committee. Then ask each merchant to furnish a list —full name and address—of each credit customer, stating whether the customer is prompt pay or slow, or whether the account is dead. From the lists sent in the secretary then proceeds to list each name alphabetically, and after each places the rating to which the customer is entitled. Other information, such as whether the customer owns property, etc., can also be added from time to time. This information in the hands of the secretary is then to be given retail merchants only on request. The plan is to give the merchant much the same service in regard to his customers as is at present supplied to the wholesale trade by Dunns and Bradstreets. The points that appeal to me in such an arrangement as this, as far as we grocers are concerned, are these: Every line of retail business would be interested. Thus, if a customer asks for credit, the grocer asks the secretary for a rating. He learns at once if any old accounts are held against that customer, if slow or prompt pay, if purchases are being made on the instalment plan, all extremely valuable information if grocers are going to reduce their bad debts to the minimum. In smaller places one of the merchants could act as secretary. In large towns and cities it would be better to place the secretary on salary and have a small office. An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure. If every grocer will make this the motto of his credit department and investigate every customer thoroughly before extending credit there will be no need of collecting agencies at 25 per cent. commission and fewer division court disappointments. Do you think the above plan a feasible one in your town?

McLaren & Co., of this city, are planning an excursion from Niagara Falls, South, and all points between there and St. Catharines to their store. The return fare is 15c to the excursionist—the regular fare is 60c. This firm held a similar excursion in the early summer from Welland. This latter was a huge success. Large crowds visited the city and McLaren & Co. reported sales for the day equal to Christmas business. Nearly all the stores on the main thoroughfare derived some benefit from this excursion. Weather permitting the excursion this week will likely prove as successful as the former one. Original business getting methods backed by good goods and service are sure to bring results.

Sherwood & Son are having a new warehouse erected in the rear of their store. The living rooms over the store are also being turned into warerooms.

INGERSOLL.

Sept. 29.—Predictions were shattered and money saved for the consumer by developments in the fruit market here during the past few days. Large receipts and excessively warm weather for the autumn season were the factors responsible for the great decline in prices. Nearly all week the retailers were carrying unusually large quantities of grapes and peaches, considerable of which was received fresh daily. The demand was heavy and justified, the placing of large orders on the part of the merchants, but the continued warm weather soon began to have its effect on the already well-ripened fruit. About the middle of the week the price of grapes, any variety, which for years has remained stationary at twenty-five cents per basket, was reduced to twenty cents. Another drop to fifteen cents per basket followed and on Saturday the unprecedented spectacle of two baskets selling for a quarter was witnessed. Once the cut was made, of course, it was necessary for practically all handling fruit to fall into line if they wished to dispose of what they had on hand. One merchant was heard to express himself very emphatically and with a rather indignant ring at the price being cut to two baskets for twenty-five cents. He considered this price absolutely absurd, claiming that the grapes were wholesaling for a higher figure right at the vineyard. However, be this as it may, the public were offered an unexampled opportunity to buy to advantage and hundreds of baskets of the fruit were turned over in a couple of days. Peaches were also sold at a big reduction in comparison with early prices. First quality Elbertas, which some people consider nearly equal to the Crawfords, sold at 60c per basket, while others of a smaller variety, but sound, and excellent for preserving, sold at 35c per basket.

For the first time this season potatoes were marketed in fairly plentiful quantities on Saturday, the sample, as a rule, being better than was expected earlier in the season. Reports from many sections are to the effect that the yield is not large, although the quality is comparatively good. Most of the sales on Saturday were made at one dollar per bag and it is hardly probable that the price will be any lower. Owing to the unusually warm weather and the drought the potato vines matured much earlier than in previous years.

At the Ingersoll Fair, which was held on Tuesday and Wednesday last, the apple exhibits were of especial interest. Although reports have been received that the crop is not a heavy one, the quality in this district, if one is to judge from the samples on exhibition at the Fair, is as good as ever. In the majority of classes there was a full representation, the specimens being large and unblemished. This is one of the sections in which the growers have realized the advantages which accrue from spraying. When spraying was in the experimental stages with the Government several years ago this was one of the first districts chosen for demonstrations. Many of the large producers who then made a test of spraying found it profitable and they have continued the process without interruption, the result being that they have usually had a good yield of fruit, most of which has been of the very best quality. Not only in apples, but also with plums and even the small fruits has spraying been adopted most successfully.

Honey continues to be a scarce commodity and the price is consequently high. The dry weather is also blamed to a certain extent for a small production of the fluid. The clover, and in fact other flowers and blossoms, are said to have perished unusually early as a result of the long dry spell and without the material to work on the busy bee has been unable to show results as compared with previous records. Lovers of honey will note the difference, particularly in the price which they are called upon to pay.

Eggs have advanced from 18c to 20c per dozen and it will not be surprising if the quarter mark is reached before Christmas.

LONDON.

September 30.—Wholesalers report business fair. Teas are rather quiet and prices firm. Fine teas are higher. Raw sugars are fluctuating in price, but there is no change in refined. Peels are in and other Christmas fruits are on the way.

With retailers trade continues fair, with collections rather slow, owing to many mechanics being on short time. An early improvement in this respect is looked for.

As a result of the shortage of fruit jars grocers have been able to sell off a quantity of sealers that are not just up to date, and have been lying on the shelves for half a dozen years or more. Wine quarts have long since been sold out, and as that is the popular size, many users have been disappointed.

Honey is coming in freely, the crop being much better than last year's. A good quantity has been shipped to the Northwest, where there is a profitable market. The principal of the Mount Elgin Institute, which raises a lot of honey, says he can pay freight to the new Provinces and still have better returns than by selling nearer home.

The dissolution of the partnership of Bloomfield & Lewis, grocers, is announced. W. Bloomfield will continue the business.

New layer figs are now in the retail stores, considerably earlier than usual.

There is still a prospect of London keeping the Canadian Packing Company, whose premises were recently destroyed by fire, and although Petrolea and Chatham are both after the concern, the Mayor is hopeful it will not leave this city. He favors offering the company a better site than that on which the old buildings were located, as an inducement to remain. The manager is now on his way to the Old Country to consult his employers, and until he returns nothing definite as to the company's intentions will be known. Meanwhile another company in the same line of business is looking to London as a place of location.

CHATHAM.

September 30.—"Business is good." This is what one hears all along the line these days. "September has been the best month since I started business," remarked one grocer to The Grocer representative yesterday. "My business for the month has been between $500 and $600 more than for the same month last year. Of course, trade has been stimulated by the demand for jars and for sugar, in consequence of the plentiful supply of fruit, but that doesn't account for more than a part of the increase."

The rain on Monday will do quite a bit of good, though it would have helped a couple of weeks sooner. Fruit trees suffered somewhat from the drought, in many instances peaches, though numerous, being smaller in size than they usually are. The crop has been so large, however, that even the drought has not had much effect. The rains, provided they do not continue too long, will benefit the wheat.

Now that the autumn is coming on, quite a number of local merchants are using autumn leaves to help out in window dressing. A local dry goods man every years features a "harvest sale," and, while sales are fortunately out of the grocer's usual line, the "harvest" effect can be worked in very prettily.

The difficulty of securing fruit jars, and the impossibility of securing a perfectly sound shipment in any case, still excites complaint. "I will lose just ten cents on that box of jars," remarked a local merchant to The Grocer man a few days ago. Out of a dozen quart jars, three were completely smashed; the top of a fourth jar was split across; while how many more were damaged it was impossible to say, owing to the fact that the two "protecting" bars across the top of the box had not yet been pried loose to permit a closer investigation.

The West Kent Agricultural Society's annual fall fair—better known as the Peninsular Exhibition—took place on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of last week. It was the best attended in years, which is another significant feature of the return of prosperity, while the exhibits were more numerous than usual. The fair brought large crowds to the city, though these people, since they were pleasure-seekers, brought little more business to the grocers. Though, in common with merchants in other lines, the grocers contribute loyally to the prize list, they make no use of the advertising facilities offered by the main building.

Ex-Ald. Wm. Potter is understood to be a likely candidate for the 1909 Mayoralty. Though defeated last year, owing to a peculiar combination of circumstances, the Queen Street grocer feels that he would enter this contest under more favorable stars. The precedent is for the defeated candidate of one year to be elected by a sweeping majority next time. Ald. John Edmondson, the father of house numbering, will likely run also.

Market fees, concerning which St. Thomas is in the midst of a strenuous struggle, have been in existence here from time immemorial. The fees were increased at the time the new market was built; and, though there was some outcry at the time the number of market patrons has largely increased. Certain spaces are let by the year, while the remaining spaces are allotted to transient vendors at so much a day.

This vicinity seems to be suffering from an egg famine. On the market last Saturday very few eggs were to be had, and vendors asked as high as 22c a dozen. The price all summer ranged from 17c to 18c.

It is reported that through the inability of manufacturers to furnish baskets and of railways to furnish iced cars, the Southwestern Michigan grape growers will be unable to market more than half their crop. The crop is one of the best in the history of the industry, but thousands of vines are not being picked; the loss as a result will, it is said, aggregate $1,000,000.

J. Caron, the Ridgetown confectioner, has put in a stock of groceries, and will run the two businesses in conjunction.

That this is the banana belt of Canada was once more shown by the fact that home-grown peanuts and sweet potatoes were among the exhibits at the Leamington fair.

Harry A. Andrew is the latest Chatham grocer to use newspaper space. Mr. Andrew has secured a corner on the front page of a local paper, right next the headline, and is making some attractive announcements.

The marshlands in the vicinity of Leamington are becoming famous for their onion crop, which is now being harvested. The marshlands seem peculiarly adapted to raising onions, which this year have been a good crop, the conditions being very favorable for ripening. Shipping is now in progress, the demand being good and prices fair, 75 cents a bushel being paid at the car. An average crop is 400 bushels an acre, while the marsh can grow onions of a quality and size heretofore undreamed of. The large onions supposed to be grown only in Bermuda are said to grow here to greater perfection. The crop is so important that the M.C.R. talk of putting down a spur line, to facilitate handling.

GUELPH.

September 30.—As a provincial authority Prof. Zavitz, of the Experimental Department of the O.A.C., makes the statement that not only is the drought doing serious damage to the root crops, but as well to the fall wheat. There are one hundred and fifty thousand acres of turnips in the province, and while the professor does not look for this crop to be ruined, he states that the lice, which thrive in hot weather, are doing a great deal of damage and that growth is practically at a standstill on account of the dryness of the soil. Regarding the fall wheat, the professor states that the crops that are coming along all right, thus far, are those where the fertilization of the land has been looked to, where the land is poor the wheat promises to be a failure.

There was a large crowd of people in the city on Saturday, but they certainly were not on the market, and those who were did not seem to have any produce with them. It must be that the farmers have not the stuff at present for there can be very little to keep them at home this weather. Inside the market was particularly small and famine prices prevailed for butter and eggs, while on the outer market the Hamilton fruit men practically did all the business. Eggs went as high as 25c, and butter from 25c to 27c, exorbitant prices for this season of the year. Chickens were sold from 75c to $1 per pair, while ducks sold from 90c to $1.25, but there was not much demand for the latter. The wonderful crop of tomatoes this year has knocked the price to as low as 10c a basket for good sound stock. Potatoes, also, are very low just now, one man only getting 40c a bag for his goods. Apples brought from 50c to 75c a bag. The fruit offering was good, the range being wide and the prices for both fruit and vegetables within the reach of everybody. The stores all seemed to do a good business.

There is now some talk of an appeal in the butter case, in which judgment was given against the chief of police for illegally confiscating short-weight butter on the market. The case is a very interesting one and will open up a great field for argument if the case goes to a higher court.

Last Sunday Domico Twebesco, who keeps a grocery and general supply store on Toronto St., was caught by the police doing a rushing business in tea, bread, cheese and tobacco, and as a result the charge was laid for a breach of the Lord's Day Act. Now they find they have to get permission from the Attorney-General's Department before proceeding. It is a mighty funny thing to me how all summer in one Greek store at least they have been doing business in confectionery and cigars, and we hear occasionally what is going to happen but they are still doing business. Most of the drug stores also do quite a trade in cigars on Sunday, and if it is fair to allow one line of business, it ought to be also fair for the others. The Merchants' Association could handle the case to a nicety if they would do so.

Jas. Gow has returned to the city, after a trip to New Ontario, where he has some claims. He is very much interested in the development of the country.

A despatch from Ottawa tells of counterfeit bank bills having been passed there and one teller in a bank detecting $37 in bogus bills in one deposit. It was interesting reading, but the idea I would like to get at is why was not the name of the bank and also a description of the bills given, so as to give merchants and business men a chance to protect themselves as well as the banks. It is not a very comfortable sensation to be told by the teller your money is N. G., when you get to the bank after working hard to get it.

There is talk of a hard winter ahead but the fruit jar men ought to have a busy time, as the stocks all over seem to be getting very low. It is a good thing for the grocers to get a chance to clean up on jars, as generally too many have to be carried all winter.

ST. THOMAS.

Sept. 29.—The St. Thomas Horse Show held last week was a great success and one of the most encouraging ever held in Canada. The interesting event to the grocers was the delivery wagon contest in which the following awards were made: 1st prize, J. A. McCance; 2nd prize, C. R.Ead; 3rd prize, Mordy & Clark; 4th prize, J. F. Pelan. W. H. Millman, of Millman & Sons, Toronto, was one of the judges.

The markets last Saturday were well attended. Butter sold for 28c and eggs advanced to 23c and 24c per dozen, owing to the moulting of the hens and consequent light supply. Potatoes were somewhat easier and sold from $1.10 to $1.20 per bag. One grocer brought in a car and had them put in his cellar for ninety cents per bag. This will assist in lowering the present high prices, as others will follow suit and the public can thank the grocers for getting the price down.

Inspector Shaw had a couple of London men summoned before Police Magistrate Glenn for peddling in the city without a license last week, and although Mr. Shaw caught them in the act the case has been twice remanded and they still continue doing business. The butchers who have lately been cutting prices held a meeting and as a result have agreed to discontinue such methods, another proof of the benefits of organization.

The Western Dairy and Provision Co., of this city, were awarded 1st prize for their butter exhibited at the London Fair and the grocers at the present time are retailing Elgin creamery, made by the said company, for from 28c to 29c as low as dairy butter is now sold for on the market. Although the dairy butter is much inferior in quality as a rule and creamery prints are from two to three cents higher, the grocers buy the creamery for 25c per lb., which makes it the most profitable, besides you never get creamery returned to you, whereas the farmers' article is often returned and the grocer meekly stands the loss and disposes of it for baking purposes.

H. F. Johnston, who recently disposed of his grocery business to Norseworthy & Co. is now located in Winnipeg, Man.

BERLIN.

September 29.—Charles Dunke, of C. B. Dunke & Co., grocers, has just returned from the west, where he, along with a group of men, purchased tracts of land in Alberta. The conflicting rumors as to the state of the crops throughout the wheat country make his report a most satisfactory one, as he says he found excellent crops wherever he went, and he covered a great deal of ground. Business prospects were, consequently, brightening very noticeably. In the absence of Mr. Dunke, Joseph Good, formerly proprietor of the Market Grocery, relieved at the Dunke grocery.

Harry Lang, formerly with Beck & Schell, has joined the staff at Betzner's grocery, succeeding George Kalbfleisch, who has gone to Preston.

Henry Wibber, who recently built a fine block for his confectionery store and manufactory, has added to his business a first-class restaurant, which was a thing badly needed in this growing city.

Operations have been resumed at the Ontario sugar factory, under the direction of James Fowler, and consequently contracts with farmers for the growing of beets will be renewed after a year of idleness at the plant.

KINGSTON.

September 29.—Saturday's market was phenomenal, the largest in years, thanks chiefly to the doing away with tollgates. It would still be larger if market fees were abolished and heavier licenses put on peddlers who do not grow their own stuff.

If Kingston had a canning factory it would help the gardeners here a lot. The supply always exceeds the demand. About a thousand bushels of choice tomatoes were taken off our market Saturday by gardeners to be used for feed for cattle.

George Bowden, who sold out his stock and goodwill at Cataraqui to Rees & Ward, is looking for another store to start up again in Kingston.

W. R. Knight has been secured as head clerk for George Gibson's grocery. He is known by farmers from all sections having run a store in Sunbury for several years.

James Martin, of Brewer's Mills, has secured a position at one of Gilbert's stores.

J. Y. Parkhill reports a scarcity of lard and predicts higher prices.

Stanley Parkhill, one of the best athletes of the Y.M.C.A., had a close call in carrying a cheese down the cellar the other day. The bottom came out and he fell over the cheese, and the cheese fell over him, turn about, five times. An encounter with a bear wouldn't show more rips and scratches. The cheese came off better, having only a few bruises.

Hon. Wm. Harty is again the unanimous nominee of the Liberal party. He was in his younger days a grocer. That's where he got his backbone. He has never known defeat. His opponent this time is Dr. Ross, at present Mayor of the city.

N. P. Wood has sold out his stock and goodwill to John Eves, who ran a store at one time on Market Street.

As I am writing the rain is pouring down in torrents and wind blowing 100 miles an hour. There will be a big drop in apples this week.

A well-attended and important meeting of the retail merchants was held in the Board of Trade Hall on Friday, September 18, when James Eadie, chief organizer of the Retail Merchants' Association, was present and addressed the meeting on "Some of the Things We Are Doing and Some of the Things We Have Done." The work of the association was summarized and the progress made shown. The address was received very favorably. The Kingston branch of the association is growing and now numbers about eighty members.

OTTAWA.

September 30.—The Ottawa market on Saturday was not a very big one, rather below the usual attendance on Saturday. Then, too, it was Hebrew's New Year's Day, and there were none of them on the market, which made quite a gap in the ranks of the vendors. There was but little change from last Thursday's prices in anything. Vegetables were featureless. There was, however, a very good supply of celery at 40 cents a dozen, and corn was a little more plentiful than last day. Butter was the only commodity which exhibited much change in price. There is very little grass in the country now, and, as a consequence, butter was selling as high as 28 cents per pail. Eggs, however, are still very reasonable at 22 cents to 25 cents per dozen.

The rather summery weather Ottawa has been favored with recently is stated to have had rather a deleterious effect on the apple trade. Asked as to the reported scarcity of the fruit this year, a well-known dealer in them asserted that though the local crop is a poor one, that of the West is very good, and that no scarcity is to be expected in this line this season.

Mr. M. Desilets, grocer, corner Dalhousie and St. Andrew Streets, is retiring from business. His entire stock of groceries, fixtures, etc., was sold by auction on Monday.

A very pretty wedding took place in this city on Tuesday, September 22, when G. O. Clark, of Clark & Reid, the brokerage firm, was married to Miss Laura Pownall. Shortly before the happy event came off friends of Mr. Clark made him the guest of honor at a banquet and theatre party.

SUBSTITUTES FOR COFFEE.

Numerous Plants Used in Place of Original Article.

There would appear to be at least two reasons why substitutes for coffee are sought—the high cost or absence of the real product, and its injurious effects when used to excess, says a writer in the Literary Digest. Prepared coffee substitutes placed on the market usually emphasize the latter reason, but many substitutes are or have been in common use that seem to depend for their existence on the former. In many cases persons acquire a liking for the substitute and come to prefer it to the real article, thus adding a third reason to the ones noted above. Says Charles Groud in La Nature:

Properly speaking, there are scarcely any real substitutes for coffee. The substances used to replace it are mostly like it only in appearance, hardly in taste. Many of them, besides, are not used alone, they are mixed with real coffee as adulterants.

Coffee belongs to the family of Rubiaceoe or Coffeinoe and to the genus Coffea. It gets its stimulating properties from a nitrogenous principle, caffein, identical with thein of tea. The different cultivated varieties contain this in very variable proportions . . . . Many non-cultivated species of the genus do not contain it at all, but simply a bitter principle which remains partly after roasting. It should be noted that most of the substitutes for coffee also contain a bitter principle.

Outside of the genus Coffea, the family of the Rubiaceoe includes several species whose seeds, when roasted, are sometimes utilized in place of coffee. Among these species may be cited the following:

Psychotria herbacea, an exotic plant.

Galium aparine (commonly called in France gratteron, or scratchweed), common throughout the country, esteemed by farmers a noxious weed. Its seeds are quite large, 3 to 6 millimeters (⅛ to ¼ inch) in diameter, and covered with a thorny skin.

The following plants also furnish seeds sometimes employed as coffee substitutes:

Oriental cassia, the black coffee of Senegal, Martinique and the Gaboon, a leguminous annual shrub, whose seeds are sometimes imported into England and Germany.

Spanish astragal (Astragalus baeticus), a leguminous plant with white flowers, of the Hispanic peninsula; the use of its seeds as coffee was very widespread during the Continental blockade.

The lupins, sometimes called native coffee. The best known from this point of view is the Lupinus varius, a small blue lupin with blue or white blossoms and round seeds spotted with white or gray. The Lupinus hirsutus or Pilosus has also been used—a large blue lupin largely employed as an ornamental plant in our gardens. The seeds of other species are used as food, after freeing them from the bitter principle common to all lupin seeds. One plant of the genus, the Lupinus luteus, has pronounced poisonous properties.

Gumbo (Hibiscus esculentus), an annual plant of the mallow family (malvaceoe) with sulphur-yellow flowers.

There have also been attempts to replace coffee with sweet acorns, asparagus seeds, various grains, holly seeds, etc. The only substitute for coffee that is in current use among us (in France) is the roasted root of the coffee-chicory, which is very commonly cultivated in the north of France and in Belgium.

After drying and roasting, the product, in which the proportion of water is greatly reduced, is three or four times richer than the raw root. A great part of its elements being soluble in water, the infusion of chicory has some food value and it is comparable with coffee only in this regard; instead of being stimulating, however, it is depurative and purgative.

In Austria-Hungary there has long been in use, instead of chicory, dried and roasted figs; fruit of second quality is used and the product is exported to Asia Minor and sometimes to Algeria. In this latter country several manufactories for the preparation of this fig-coffee have been established. The product has an agreeable taste of toasted almonds.—The Literary Digest.

NEW SAUCE MANUFACTURERS IN TORONTO.

A new concern for the manufacture of sauces, extract of beef and concentrated beef tablets, has been recently started at 27 Wellington Street West, Toronto, under the name of the Mason-Miller Co. The head of the firm, Mr. Mason, has had large experience in the manufacture of similar goods in England, and is turning out an excellent product. The firm's No. 1 sauce has been tried in local hotels and restaurants and very favorably received. It is being put on the market through the jobbing trade, through whom sales will be made. The firm's extract of beef in glass jars, has in an attractive form in glass jars, has been used very largely in the English hospitals and should find ready sale here.

The firm is anxious to interest the retail trade in its goods and will send samples to any who mention The Grocer.

HOW TRADE IS LOST.

Have you ever wondered why the trade of certain customers who once dealt largely with you ceases suddenly? Have you ever seen a one-time patron pass your store and go into your competitor's? Have you ever wondered at the mushroom-like growth of some younger man who opened in your town and within a few years had the cream of the trade that had once been yours?

There's some mighty good reason, you can wager, and it may be just the fault of service, either on your part or on that of your employes. Emerson says: "The highest price you can pay for some things is to have to ask for them." Fair treatment and courteous attention are embarrassing things to have to ask for, and customers don't come to your store to be embarrassed.

The dollars and cents value of service as shown by such incidents in everyday business ought to set merchants thinking. Every instance of indifferent attention, every disagreeable or sarcastic word, every impatient gesture, every scowl or quick retort to a customer, spells LOSS—not mere theoretical loss, but loss that can be determined in money—that takes dollars out of your cash drawer and puts them into that of your wiser competitor.

Remember that courtesy and patience, sympathy and intelligent suggestion just as certainly spell GAIN, and the next time you are tempted to kick about your paint department take the time to go into the matter as I have, and you'll be ready to agree with me that there isn't a line that can be made more profitable to carry by the retailer, IF you but go at the thing in the right way.

HINTS TO BUYERS.

Reading notices under this heading will be accepted at 10 cents per agate line.

Laporte, Martin & Co., Montreal, are offering Tarragona nuts and Sultana raisins at attractive prices to those who take advantage of their offer promptly. This firm are also making prices alluring in many lines of dried fruits and nuts in stock and to arrive. Their stock is a very complete one and prices are right to those who take advantage of this opportunity early. Laporte, Martin & Co. apparently were not caught short of pink salmon, which they are now offering to the trade at a price which will allow the retailer to sell for 10 cents.—Advt.

G. Wallace Weese manufacturers' representative, Hamilton, has recently added several attractive lines to the already large list of agencies. He is established in Myles' fireproof storage warehouse at the corner of Main and Hughson Sts. and is giving special attention to storage and distribution.

PRESS COLLECTIONS NOW.

The month of September has been a busy one for the grocer. With the business incident to fruit preserving and the furnishing of supplies for pickling, etc., he has been pretty well tied down. Now that the large part of this business is done he will have more opportunity to think of other things.

One of the matters to which the Canadian retailer can most profitably devote his time and thoughts just now is the collection of accounts. Several reasons emphasize the importance of giving attention to this now.

In the first place, the reaction from the stiff season of winter and spring is well under way. Money is considerably freer and the customers, most of them, have had a chance during the summer to get well on their feet. The accounts the grocers have been carrying from a philanthropic purpose, and there are thousands of such in Canada, should be cleaned up at once if at all possible. If not, the likelihood of gathering these in at all is exceedingly slight, for in a very short time, winter, with all its extra demands, will be on us again and the cash will not be forthcoming.

Just now, too, the farmers are in pretty comfortable circumstances and should be able to settle all their obligations without difficulty. The Canadian farmer generally ought to be pretty well off all round this year. This condition, though, is particularly evident in the West. A gentleman closely in touch with Western conditions, in speaking to the writer the other day, said that the farmers of the West will this year receive twice as much for their crop all round as they did a year ago. It behooves Western merchants, then, to get their books cleaned up and to start the year with a clean sheet.

The wholesalers are showing their appreciation of present conditions by their activity in regard to the settlement of old accounts and their care in writing new ones. It is incumbent on the retailer, in his turn, and is much to his advantage, to take similar steps.

APPLE PRICES CLIMBING.

Already apple growers in New York State are asking from $2.35 to $2.50 per barrel for apples. Early in the season the price started off at $1.50, and shortly after jumped to $2. Many buyers took large quantities at these figures, and they stand to gain something for the price has gone up again, buyers offering $2.25, but growers standing out for from 10 to 25 cents higher.

Many dealers say there is a similarity between New York and Ontario apples, only that the Ontarios are of a better quality, due to the better climate, the farther north the growing ground the better the quality. New York State apples come on the market a little earlier than natives, and it is not out of reason to say that there is an analogy in regard to prices here in Canada and those across the border. The Toronto market also opened at $1.50, and while some few may yet be had at that price, the ruling quotation is around $1.65, and even $2.00 is asked for some grades. This bears out the prediction made in these columns a fortnight ago that $2.50 would not be too high a price for choice winter apples.

Another feature that will send apple prices up is the exportation of the fruit. Just now Great Britain is using home apples, but in about six weeks American apples will be crossing the ocean. There was a hot spell in the fruit districts of England this summer which dried and burned up some of the fruit. This should stimulate demand. Again the fruit on this side of the ocean is again of good quality. Against these two facts must be put the effect of the rather dull conditions prevailing throughout the British Isles. Whether or not this will curtail the demand for American fruit is as yet an open question.

VALUABLE MARKET REPORTS.

A couple of instances of just how valuable The Grocer is to some of its subscribers by reason of its practical and reliable market reports came to hand during the week.

One of our regular readers said to the writer on Tuesday: "I've been reading your cereal market reports right along, and, a few weeks ago, noticing how you were talking of dearer oats, I bought a car on the strength of it. I've already made at least $25 on the deal, and am going to keep on reading The Grocer."

The other case was rather less direct, but illustrates how much we can sometimes do for our subscribers. A merchant in Nelson, B.C., after having read The Grocer of the week before, wired us last week: "Will buy car of eggs at your last quotations." Naturally enough, between the time the market report was written and reached Nelson, eggs had advanced a cent or two. With a view to giving the subscriber satisfaction, however, inquiry was made through the trade, dealers located who could fill the order and their names with the best current price wired back. One of the dealers mentioned told us this week that they had sent a car of eggs to Nelson. Pretty good business, wasn't it?

The moral of these two incidents is obvious. We want The Grocer to be of real dollars and cents value to its subscribers, and are trying to do what we can to make it such. If we can help you let us know.

TO TEACH ADVERTISING AND SALESMANSHIP.

That the art of advertising and the science of salesmanship are now regarded as great factors in the commercial world is proven by the fact that in New York classes have been formed among young men and women for the purpose of studying these branches. A definite schedule of the work to be covered has been made, and a strong course of lectures has been prepared. In the advertising course such subjects will be taken up as advertisement writing, preparation of catalogues, follow-up systems, laying out an advertising campaign, advertising problems of the different lines of business, value of trade marks, etc.

Another innovation is the introduction of a two years' course in saleswomanship, designed to prepare pupils for expert sales service in retail and department stores. Lectures will be delivered on the art of selling, store organization, manufacture of commercial products, etc.

The Canadian Grocer, Hardware and Metal or Dry Goods Review, as the case may be, realizing the importance of these two features, has published valuable information regarding them both in its Talks on Good Advertising and in the reproduction of "Men Who Sell Things," now appearing in the paper in each issue.

COST OF DOING BUSINESS.

Much is being said and written about the necessity for manufacturers to arrive at the exact cost of making their products, figured to the minutest detail, in order that the selling price may leave a margin of profit sufficient to insure the permanent welfare of the business. This is none the less a necessity for the retail dealer in groceries. The discount allowed by the manufacturer or jobber is unimportant in itself. The important margin of profit is that which is left after every deduction necessitated by the proper conduct of the business has been made. In proportion as business increases, many dealers become lax in the detail of the daily routine. Such laxity is a forerunner of failure. The man who succeeds as a dealer, just as the man who succeeds as a manufacturer, is the one who knows accurately and definitely what every article costs him delivered to the customer, and who then allows himself a reasonable margin of profit over this figure. There are scores of dealers selling goods below cost to-day, thinking that they are making money on them, simply because they do not figure costs as they should be figured. If a man can succeed by these methods, he is defying a rule of economics which, so far as we know, is without an exception.

UNFAVORABLE WEATHER FOR MOLASSES.

Advices just received by Rose & Laflamme, Montreal, from the Barbados, dated Sept. 9, have the following to say regarding the molasses situation: "The growing crop is at the present time in a very critical condition. The rainfall for the past eight months has been smaller than for the corresponding period for some years; in some districts the canes, although low, have kept surprisingly green, but in others, they are undoubtedly injured, owing to the lack of moisture. Yesterday good rains fell in some districts, but not in others. Needless to say, we are all anxiously hoping that September will be more favorable as regards the rainfall than was July or August." From this it would seem the extremely dry weather from which Canada and the United States has been suffering has also extended to the West Indies.

THE SITUATION IN THE WEST.

The Western Viewpoint, by our Special Correspondent.

Fort William, Sept. 30.—"You would think there was not a bushel of wheat in the west, so chary is everyone of selling it," said the manager of one of Canada's leading export houses the other morning. And this is literally true. Receipts have been very liberal, but offerings were light every day of the week and prices ruled high and firm. There has been a moderate export trade, but the British buyer evidently hopes for a break in prices and buys cautiously and in limited quantities only, but the demand from eastern millers has been very good. There has been a noticeable lowering in grade this week, as the damaged districts are being heard from. The complaint of car shortage is growing more acute daily, though the receipts are so heavy. The fact of the matter is that the weather has been so favorable for threshing that a larger bulk of wheat is ready for movement than is usual at this season. So there is really something in the claim of the railways that they are moving as much as is reasonable to expect of them under the circumstances.

There has been a strenuous endeavor to get the wheat past inspection at Winnipeg, and for some days there seemed to be delay in getting it forward from Winnipeg to Fort William, so much so in fact that your correspondent made a daylight trip to the terminal towns to see what was doing and to judge what the handling would be like when there was a still greater rush of cars coming forward. Along the line there was no evidence of delay or blockade at any point, as of the 400 wheat cars counted in the 420 miles, only 41 were stationary. All the others had engines attached and were on the move. This, of course, did not apply to Kenora, where there were a large number of cars without engines, and it was impossible to say in what direction they were going. There was no appearance of congestion, however. At Fort William the arrangements for handling the crop this year are most complete. The new distributing yard at Westfort is in full commission. It has 13 tracks, each capable of holding 50 cars, and with a pony engine at work it is quite easy to distribute cars to the individual tracks of the various elevators at the rate of 50 cars an hour. It is a rule that this yard must be cleared of all grain cars arriving that day before 10.30 p.m. It keeps the inspectors busy checking up the cars with the Winnipeg sheets, in order to be ready for their turn on the poling track. Everything in the way of freight coming in from the west is handled through this yard, with the exception of the cattle trains.

So far as the C.P.R. elevators are concerned there has been a material improvement in the arrangements for quick handling. A splendid new working house has been erected at elevator "D," the company's largest tank warehouse. This house is equipped with four tracks, where cars can be unloaded simultaneously aad the building has an unloading and elevating capacity of 256,000 bushels every 10 hours, and will be in commission by October 1st. Many improvements and conveniences have been added to "B" and "C" and the old veteran "A" erected in 1884, has been retimbered throughout. All the company's elevators are now operated with power from the Kakabaka Falls, and the electrical machinery is of the latest design. In addition to the four monster elevators of the C.P.R., there is the Consolidated. This is the elevator furthest up the Kaministikwia river, and is near to the G.T.P. bridge. Then there is the 750,000-bushel elevator of the Ogilvie Milling Co., and the Empire, a splendidly equipped house just at the mouth of the Kaministikwia.

All day long the big wheat boats are ranged alongside one or other of these elevators and the wheat pours in. It is just four years this month since your correspondent visited the terminals, and the development in that time is enormous. The coal docks have been doubled and at present the coal is going out to build up western stocks at the rate of 100 cars per day, while on Friday and Saturday 16,000 tons of coal were unloaded. At Fort William this month all energies are concentrated on two things, the getting of package freight and coal and the getting out of wheat.

The town of Fort William is growing rapidly and new buildings of the most substantial character are going up in every direction. The first wholesale house, a splendid warehouse for groceries and provisions, is just being completed. —H.

WHAT TO DO IN OCTOBER

Hints and Suggestions for the Mid-Autumn Month—Give the Windows and Store Interior a Suggestively Fall Appearance—Look After the Homecomers.

The extremely warm and summer-like weather which we have been having during September has somewhat prevented people from thinking seriously of the cool weather to come. These days, however, seem to have come on us suddenly and thoughts are now turned toward preparation for the late autumn and winter. In the summer time people desire foods which are the least heating but on the approach of the cold weather more heat-producing food must be taken, not only to supply the body with motive power, but to keep it warm. It is not necessary to be a physiologist to know what foods are rich in the desired qualities and the up-to-date grocer has sufficient knowledge to cover the requirements. This fact may be taken advantage of and should figure prominently in the month's advertising campaign in order that the people may know that their wants and requirements are properly anticipated by the grocer.

Make Known the New Things.

Some consideration should be given to the new products which make their appearance in the month of October. Principal among these are dried fruits and nuts, which are already on their way to be distributed throughout the country. In addition to these many of our own winter fruits and vegetables are highly seasonable.

When the things which are appropriate for consideration in this month have been determined the character of the displays and advertising may be decided upon.

Before anything is done, however, the store should be prepared for the new stock by a thorough overhauling and cleaning. And when this is accomplished the old stock and the summer goods should be relegated to less conspicuous places to make way for the more seasonable stock.

Change the Window Displays.

The window should have an autumn appearance. This may be accomplished by using autumn leaves or making the price cards in the form of leaves. Hams, bacon, lard, cheese, canned meats etc., are suitable for decoration and they may be built up into numberless pretty designs or displays arranged on the floor of the window. Such foods as these are in more demand during the winter owing to their character. At this time of the year also, indulgence in cool beverages is dying off and the people are looking to hot drinks to assist in keeping up the body heat. Special attention, therefore, should be given to this matter and the materials used be given a prominent place. The consumption of tea and coffee invariably increases at this time of the year and the grocer who has a well selected stock will get the preference. Along the line of seasonable goods may be mentioned dried fruits and nuts which are arriving in large quantities from foreign countries. Suitable displays of these can be made. Frequently display cards are placed on goods stating simply the name and price of the goods advertised. This same card may be made more attractive by the addition of a sentence perhaps stating the locality in which the stock was grown and also informing the public that this locality has long been famous for its fruits of this variety. We will take, for instance, the case of Valencia raisins. To many the word Valencia conveys nothing save the fact that it is generally associated with this variety of a raisin. We know that the fruit derives its name from the province in Spain, where they are grown. No other part of the world has produced a variety with precisely the same flavor. These and other facts concerned with their production are interesting to the buyer. In making a display of raisins and other dried fruits certain salient features which apply to the particular variety advertised may be set forth.

Spices and Jars in Season.

October is a pickling month and in the smaller towns the piquant odor resulting from such operations are frequently met with. Just here a field is opened and spices and other things required by the housewife should be attended to. Nowadays many jars for this purpose are on the market, all of which possess more or less merit and if the grocer is discriminating he will select the best kind and bring the fact before his lady patrons. The essential point of course in the construction of a jar is its quality of rendering the interior air-tight. If, after the lapse of a few weeks, the housewife finds to her dismay that her pickles and preserves have gone wrong owing to some flaw in the jar, the grocer is more than liable to be informed of the fact.

Vinegars are largely in demand at this season of the year and special attention to them will result in increased sales. In this connection the grocers' mission is both educational as well as commercial. White wine vinegar is sometimes not fancied on account of its colorless appearance and extremely acrid taste. This makes the customer skeptical regarding its value and often the argument is advanced that it is "too acidy." They fail to appreciate the fact that pure vinegar is pure acetic acid in a diluted form, commonly known as white wine vinegar. The addition of malt or maple flavoring does not remove the fact that it is acetic acid although it may give it a more agreeable appearance. The illusion, however, is being eliminated in a measure with the diffusion of more literature dealing with the composition of food stuffs.

Canadian beans made their appearance in October and their preparation in the form of "Boston Baked Beans" is always a delectable dish in the cool, crisp evenings of this month. The sale of breakfast foods, especially those which are served hot, receive an impetus at this time of the year and it is a good time for the grocer to examine his stock to make sure there is nothing alive in them, as this fact is most productive of dissatisfaction among customers and the impression which it conveys of the nature of the store is far from admirable. This condition, however, arises in the best ordered stores which are models of cleanliness, and the frequency of such difficulties can only be diminished by unremitting vigilance.

Show Housecleaning Supplies.

Many women make a resolve to clean house in September, but the departure of summer guests and other incidental happenings which are left over from the summer more often than otherwise render this impossible and October as a result witnesses the general upheaval of the home. There is a large proportion, however, who never clean house until October, so this feature of domestic economy often extends throughout the entire month. New brushes, brooms, tubs, mops, washboards, stepladders, cleaning compounds and clothes lines will be in brisk demand. The discriminating merchant will anticipate this in the form of an attractive window display. Originality of design has a good chance to display itself in the arrangement of these things which in themselves are not very attractive but novelty of arrangement achieves this end.

The grocers who have a candy counter should give it an overhauling preparatory for the winter months.

Look After the Homecomers.

In the month of October there will be a goodly number of people returning to the city from the country and especially so this year, as September has been such a fine month, they have lingered longer in the country. These people have been away many months and it is possible they may transfer their patronage to another grocer, unless they are looked after sharply. They may imagine the long sojourn in the country will give them an opportunity of patronizing another grocer and that a new grocer may attend to their wants better and give them better value for their money. This, then, is the dangerous time when they may wander into the fold of another unless they are taken care of immediately. October is a good month to offer special inducements in the way of genuine bargains and in this way the people will be attracted to the store and the chances are good for holding them.

From the sum of all these suggestions it is obvious that they all tend toward an appearance of the store inside and out, which is seasonable and suggestive of the middle autumn.

QUEBEC MARKETS

Montreal, October 1, 1908.

POINTERS—

Fish—Declined.
Cornmeal—Advanced.
Manitoba Shorts—Advanced.
Manitoba Bran—Declined.
Butter—Advanced.
Cheese—Easier.

Trade locally has been only fair and business men generally seem to think things have settled down to about the gait which it will maintain during the winter, until navigation opens next summer. They don't expect the grain crop to do much towards altering affairs or the elections either, but for some reason which it is hard to define they look forward to better conditions locally next spring. This seems to be a fair statement of affairs, as they stand now. It cannot be said to be too rosy, at the same time it is not too much the other way. Buyers, according to the wholesale houses, are not stocking up very heavily, preferring to feel their way along easily. Collections have been somewhat slow otherwise the week has been a fairly good one taken altogether. The flour and feed business has presented active conditions. The activity in this market is especially noticeable in the country. Large supplies of fish are arriving which has depressed the price of some lines slightly. Business is reported excellent in this trade.

Tea has not been very active during the week, there being but a small demand for blacks and greens, and demand was only medium. Sugar activity is falling off some. The new dried fruits are beginning to make their appearance, and are opening up well. Owing to the shortage in the run, barreled salmon is very scarce and dealers are complaining of difficulty in finding a sufficient amount to get along with.

SUGAR—Sugar has somewhat spent its strength and is now subsiding into a pretty even condition. The impetus which this market generally experiences at this time of the year was shorter this season than for some years, but while it was on, it was very active. There are no changes in prices.

MOLASSES AND SYRUPS—There was only a fair demand for molasses during the week. Syrups were more sought after, however, especially in the tinned variety. Prices remain the same as at last quotation.

DRIED FRUITS—New crop Amelia currants have arrived and are now offering at 5½c in barrels. In the middle of October, the first cargo shipment will arrive in Montreal. The Eugenia has orrived in New York, she being the first boat to leave Greece this season loaded with currants. She carries a cargo of 1,700 to 1,800 tons and shipments to other points have begun. Reports from Bussorah state there is a fine quality of Persian dates. The tone of the California seeded raisin market is firm. Valencias are quiet and unchanged. Altogether the dried fruit market is not as active as in former years, but this is to be expected owing to conditions of trade generally.

CANNED GOODS

The only event of interest of the week is the advance on all lines of peas of 2½ cents, which took place yesterday. The new prices are quoted in the table below.

Reports from the canners state that the tomato pack is not likely to be so large as was expected. The drouth has had some effect, and this week will see the pack about completed. The quality of the tomatoes put up, however, has been excellent.

TORONTO.—Sales of fruits and vegetables have not been heavy during the week, the large quantities of fresh fruit on the markets seeming to interfere with both the retailers' and the jobbers' sales. Canned meats are going forward fairly well.

MONTREAL.—Canned meats of Canadian manufacture are more in demand this week, also fish. Fruits are slightly neglected, while vegetables are in fair demand only. An advance in the price of canned peas is stated to take place October 1st.

WINNIPEG.—Low prices on corn, peas and tomatoes still prevail, and apparently the end is not yet in sight. Buying is heavy at the present low prices, as it is not expected that present abnormal conditions, due to local competition, will long obtain.

ST. JOHN.—All canned fruits and vegetables are now on the market, and prices are somewhat lower than last year. The pack of peas is short, and the price advanced 2½ cents on October 1st. Salmon is higher and corned beef is a little lower.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

POINTERS—

Sugar—Steady.

Teas—Ceylons firmer.

Dried Fruits—Apricots and prunes selling well.

Collections—Fair.

Toronto, October 1, 1908.

Wholesalers continue to report optimistically, though the week has undoubtedly been quieter than the one preceding. This can be attributed probably to the falling off in the demand for sugar, with the approach of the end of the preserving season. The markets continue pretty steady, with scarcely any changes. Interest is centred in the newly-arriving dried fruits and business in these is reported very fair. The demand for prunes and apricots is reported good, by the houses who have these goods in. Some have not yet received their shipments.

The past month has seen a great business in fruit jars. The cheap fruit has caused a demand almost unprecedented, and jobbers and retailers alike have had their stocks practically cleared out. In some districts there has been almost a famine in the jars, but the great demand has been a very good thing for the grocers, for it has allowed them to get rid of their old stock, some of which they might not like to offer at regular times.

Collections are reported fairly good, and the general tone of confidence seems to be gaining sway.

SUGAR—The market continues steady with no likelihood of an immediate change. Wholesalers' business has dropped off a good deal during the week owing to the approach of the end of the household preserving season.

Willett & Gray, in their weekly report on raws, say: "The review of this week shows that the details have been favorable to the market, as last week indicated. Beet sugar advanced from 9s 9d to 10s under small and irregular fluctuations, but closing steady at the advance. At the close the market appears to be nearly cleared of all available sugar, except Javas for arrival and new crop Demeraras and Brazils. There are some 253,000 tons of Javas afloat, sold and unsold, and these must form our principal source of supply from now until the Louisiana and Cuba crops mature, the former being due next month and of good promise as to quality to be marketed. There would seem to be no occasion to call upon Europe for more beet sugar this campaign, the quantity already received (139,000 tons) being fully up to the amount anticipated by us earlier in the season. Prices look steady and firm, depending somewhat upon Europe, which continues higher than our parity, say beets at 10s, being equal to 4,11s per lb. for 96 degrees Centrifugals landed."

"Future beets for October and May also show an advancing tendency, closing at 9s 7½d, for October (4.01c per lb.) and 9s 11¼d for May (4.09c per lb.) Crop reports, for both beet and cane are generally favorable. In the meantime available raws look steady and strong, in view of the higher parity of European beet sugars. Receipts for the week were about the same as last week, 38,885 tons; meltings unchanged at 40,000 tons, and stocks 255,097 tons, against 256,212 tons last week and 234,921 tons last year.

"The total stock of Europe and America, 981,097 tons, against 1,187,421 tons last year at the same uneven dates. The decrease of stock is 206,324 tons, against a decrease of 176,638 tons last week. Total stocks and afloats together show a visible supply of 1,299,097 tons, against 1,457,421 tons last year, or a decrease of 158,324 tons."

TEA—Business locally is not particularly active, though some buying is being done. Advices received by local brokers this week note a firmer feeling all round in Ceylons.

DRIED FRUITS—With new raisins, currants, prunes and apricots in, considerable interest is being displayed, though as a rule grocers are anxious to clean out their old stocks before buying much of the new goods. The larger grocers, however, are buying to some extent, and advance sales are going on fairly well with all classes. Prunes and apricots are in exceedingly good quality. Apricots ought to go well this year with prices away below last. New peels are also lower and are of good quality. Current quotations are given below:

IS CHINA TEA COMING BACK TO ITS OWN?

Recent Movements Point to Interesting Developments.

Is China tea coming to regain its old place in the world's markets?

The question is a very interesting one and some light has been thrown on this by recent developments in the world's markets. Since the organization of the China Tea Association in London and China, some time ago, the educational work which has been done among the Chinese growers and shippers seems to be having some effect. How this is working out practically is shown by the trade reports from the Chinese customs, which say that Great Britain almost doubled her purchases of tea from that country last year, and that Russia, who is the largest customer, and also the rest of Europe, as well as the United States, increased their purchases. The total export for the year is given as 214,683,333 pounds, and this is said to be the largest in recent years.

Taking all factors into consideration it begins to look as though China has at last awakened to the possibilities of her tea trade, and is striving to recover something of her old position in the world's markets.

Ever since the tea industry of India and Ceylon came into prominence the Chinese have been warned that they were in danger of losing the greater part of their trade. There were complaints against the methods of packing and preparing the teas, though these seem to have been generally directed against only the cheaper grades. The Chinese, with their characteristic slowness and conservatism, seem to have paid little attention to this, or to general market conditions, and as a result, the tea trade was diverted and British-grown teas received the preference.

A recent article in the Shanghai Zeitung on this subject, says that within the past four years China has really awakened to the fact that the days when she was mistress of the tea markets is past, and that only through active and persistent efforts can she again become anything of an important factor in the tea trade. The work of the newly-organized China Tea Association seems to be having a good deal of effect in bringing dealers to a realization of existing conditions, aad it seems likely that China teas will show a steady improvement and a consequent increase in popularity from now on.

The fact that direct efforts are being made to improve the industry, not only by the dealers, but also by the Government, is supported by a recent despatch from Shanghai to London to the effect that the Chinese Board of Agriculture has arranged with the Board of Finance to reduce the export duty on tea, with a view to the encouragement of the China tea trade.

MANITOBA MARKETS

(Market quotations corrected by telegraph up to 9 a.m. Thursday, October 1, 1908.)

A steady improvement in business conditions is reported from all parts of the West, and the outlook is particularly promising. The new wheat is being rushed to the lake ports in record-breaking quantities and the gradual introduction of crop money into general circulation is having a beneficial effect on business conditions.

B. C. GROCERS' CONVENTION.

Retailers From All Parts of Province Discuss Trade Questions.

Special dispatch to the Canadian Grocer.

Vancouver, October 1.—Retail grocers from all over the Province were gathered in Vancouver this week discussing the many questions affecting the retail trade in Western Canada. The meeting was called by the B. C. Retail Grocers' Exchange and it was held on Tuesday and Wednesday, September 29 and 30, in the Orange Hall. Among the matters dealt with were the fixing of selling prices by manufacturers; terms and discounts; tabulating of lists of delinquent accounts from the entire Province and fixing a definite profit on local butter. Other topics were also brought up. The wholesale trade was asked to send representatives so that the meeting should be a comprehensive one, and a number of these were present. This is the first general trade convention of its kind to be held in the Province, and every effort was made to have the attendance large. A banquet was tendered the visiting grocers on Wednesday evening. The Washington State convention was held Wednesday and Thursday of last week at Bellingham, and a number of delegates attended from this city.

"Men Who Sell Things"

Further Consideration of the Qualities of the Retail Salesman—Something on How the "Easy-Goer" Does His Work —A Good Man Must Know the Goods Better Than the Customer—The Reason for One Man's Success.

By Walter D. Moody—Serial rights for Canada purchased by the MacLean Publishing Co. from the publishers, A. McClurg & Co., Chicago.

In truth, the only thing the customer is trying to decide upon is whether to land on his brainless cranium, report him at the office, or go across the street and get what he wants from Joy, Gladhand & Co. If he is of a peaceful, retiring nature, and does not want to create a scene, he hastily selects something that he wouldn't have as a gift under other circumstances; but he is determined to have no more dealings with that house. He will keep on trading with Joy, Gladhand & Co.

The Easygoer.

Then there's a twin brother to our dyspeptic friend, a few doors down the street. His name is Meander Gadgood. You walk blithely up to his counter, feeling at peace with all the universe, and stand there, first on one foot and then the other,—two, three, five minutes,—waiting for Meander to separate himself from a group of pennant-winning judges in council at the other end of the counter.

Just as you are thinking of going over to Joy, Gladhand & Co.'s, Meander, with a ten-mile look in his eyes, saunters up. Never a word does he speak. With one eye menacingly raking you over from head to foot, and the other regretfully focussed on the other boys, he stands there, his gray matter—what little there is of it—following his favorite ball team on a distant diamond.

Though there is a reasonable excuse for homicide on your part, you smother your wrath and politely ask to be shown the latest styles in three-dollar fancy shirts. Listlessly reaching into the case, Meander paws over the stock, extracts a couple of patterns, slides them over to you with the air of one administering absent treatment, and stalks back to see how the judges have settled the matter.

About the time you have concluded that you don't need any more shirts anyway, back he comes and hovers like a phantom long enough for you to say, in tones that indicate a gathering storm, that if he is through with his more important business than waiting on his customers you will look at a few more shirts, including some of the good sellers.

Not being an adept at human barometer reading, Meander fumbles around in the stock, finally lugging out one or two more patterns than any man, to say nothing of a shirt salesman, might know were selected with poor taste. Bombarding you with his new-found relics of a past season's success, he retreats again in perfect order to the rearguard for another confab. Intuitively feeling the angry glances cast in his direction, he determines to renew the attack by rushing things, and sails back only to be repulsed with a fusilade of indignant protests.

Without a moment's further loss of time, you are well on your way to Joy, Gladhand & Co.'s, where, when you ask to see shirts in any style or price, no effort is spared until the entire line is promptly displayed, if necessary, to please a customer and insure a sale.

Are you that kind of salesman? If you recognize your portrait and it fails to please you, don't blame the photographer. He cannot improve on nature by making a pleasing likeness from an unattractive subject.

A Summing up of Qualities.

Mr. Near Salesman, the time has gone by when representation without courtesy, or life, or enthusiasm can produce profitable sales. You must show the spirit of accommodation and be interesting and convincing in your arguments. You cannot do that successfully unless you are full of your subject, have the utmost faith in your proposition, and are running over with enthusiasm.

A new spirit rules the world of salesmanship in place of the old go-as-you-please regime. It is an expression of the mighty force that does things—enthusiasm. If your blood corpuscles are not saturated with it, you are out of date, and you will soon be out of salesmanship if you do not find a way to cultivate it.

Enthusiasm, the first requisite in salesmanship, a sincere interest in the thing to be sold, and a desire to sell it decently,—that is, really, nearly all there is to it; for enthusiasm must perforce lead to a study and a knowledge of the thing to be sold, as well as a study of those to whom we wish to sell it. You cannot cultivate enthusiasm with one eye on the clock and the other on everything else than the customer who is patiently waiting an opportunity to spend some of his money at your counter.

Know the Goods.

A good salesman must know more about his goods than the man he is selling to knows about them. Knowledge and enthusiasm beat oratory every time. Enthusiasm in a salesman begets enthusiasm in a customer.

You must know your business and you must work, if you wish to hold trade, get new trade and draw a bigger salary than the common avarage salesmen.

The law of nature is yet to be discovered that will prevent a salesman being diplomatic, enthusiastic, honest, and hard-working all the time. Look about you, and you will discover a few like that in the very ranks in which you serve. Keep your eyes on them, they will not remain with you long. You will see them advanced to managing positions or owning their own businesses in a few years.

There is a chance for you if you will about face and take up the line of action in real earnest.

One Salesman's Success.

In an interview by a well-known writer on business subjects with one of the leading State Street department stores in Chicago, he was told by the manager that a young man once applied to his house for a position as salesman. He was asked what his qualifications were, and he answered, "My stock in trade consists of knowing the faults of ordinary salespeople through having to put up with them during many years of shopping."

He was given a place, and the first day sold more goods than any other salesman in his department. He had the knack of putting customers into a good humor by laying himself out to please. He studied his customer's first inquiry intently, and followed that up instantly and intelligently. At the end of a year he was earning twenty-five dollars per week in that store. A short time afterwards he was offered fifty dollars a week by a gentleman accompanying a cross-grained customer whom he, without losing his temper, had successfully waited upon under exceedingly vexing circumstances.

The Secret of His Success.

On leaving to accept the new position, one of his fellow-salesmen asked him how he accounted for his remarkable ability to effect sales.

Promptly came the reply: "The great majority of salespeople lack tact, enthusiasm, and sympathy with customers."

A great many high-saleried traveling salesmen, and nearly all of the most successful retail merchants in the country, have themselves been behind the counter. There is no better place to get a selling education.

THE "HOUSEHOLD WORD."

Most of us can think of quite a number of commercial names that are really "household words." There is only one thing which can raise an article of commerce into the household word class, and that is, Persistent Publicity. The man who travels for a firm whose name is a household word with its trade has an easy time of it compared to the representative of a less known concern. The traveler for an obscure firm is badly handicapped in the race for orders! As far as the trade is concerned there is no method of obtaining wide publicity at a moderate cost equal to advertising in the trade press. Persistent, progressive advertising in a trade paper which holds the full confidence of its readers is the best letter of introduction any firm can give to its travelers.

BRITISH ARMY CONTRACTS FOR U. S. PACKERS.

Why Canadian Firms Do Not Obtain a Share of This Business.

The following despatch from its London, England, correspondent appeared in a recent issue of the New York Herald :

"The British War Office, I learn, has just awarded a big contract for canned meat to Messrs. Libby, McNeill & Libby. This is the third award given to a Chicago firm by the War Office during the year."

The Grocer interviewed a number of Canadian packers, with a view to finding out whether the despatch was authentic and also why these contracts had gone to a United States, rather than to a Canadian firm.

The concensus of opinion was to the effect that no doubt it was true that the Chicago packers got the contracts. Specifications were and are sent to Canadian packers, but none of them tendered. The one great reason for this is that the Canadian packing plants are comparatively small, and cannot at all compete in output with United States concerns. The meat-packing industry is rather a precarious business, and for tendering alone on such a contract Canadian packers would be put to great expense. For instance, the Chicago packers with very large plants tender on Government contracts as a matter of course. They are turning out immense quantities of canned goods daily, and the acceptance of such a contract only means a divergence for a time of some of this output; whereas Canadian concerns would be put to enormous expense if their tender were accepted, by being compelled to enlarge their plant. Even if the contract was not offered to a Canadian firm, great loss would be entailed by the useless additions that had been made in anticipation of getting business. Of course, Canadian packers might look for a small share of this business, but up to now they have not thought fit to do so. The British and Canadian authorities would be willing to help in this regard, for they are favorably disposed. Every time a contract is to be given, Canadians are sent specifications on which to tender. The Dominion Government has not helped Canadian packers to obtain a share of this business because it has not been asked to do so, but that they are disposed to help is shown by the fact that during the South African war Prof. Robertson, of Ste. Anne de Bellevue College, interested the Dominion authorities in regard to having Canadian canned goods sent to the battlefields, where the products were much appreciated by the soldiers in camp.

Canadian canned meats compare more than favorably with the Chicago product and are in a class by themselves ; but when it comes to price, the Chicago men have it pretty much their own way. The United States packers have a number of advantages over competitors. In the first place—leaving altogether aside the fact of large plants and great working capital—supplies are greater on the other side. Again, when Canadian packers have to pick choice cattle and hogs—because the Canadian consuming public will have no culls—bone the carcasses, and can use only the best grades of meat—thus increasing cost of production —Chicago packers, after grading the animals, pack the rougher grades without boning and sell at a cheap price to the foreign element througout the U. S. This brings a profit, which allows them to bone the higher grades before canning and also enables them to sell the better goods at a lower price than Canadian goods.

CHEESE AND BUTTER BULLETIN

Montreal, October 1, 1908.

Reports from the Eastern Townships state that the prolonged drought will not prevent the realization of good crops. The only industry that will suffer largely is the dairying interest. Happily, however, since the arrival of these reports, copious rains have fallen which seem to be general. The pastures have again taken on their usual green appearance, and for a time at least the prospects are good for a normal yield of dairy products. The set-back, however, has been too great to allow last year's record to be overtaken. From the United States and England advices state that high prices have a tendency to check trade. Some speculators have taken a chance owing to the drought and a prospective shortage. Exporters on this side continue to receive some orders from the other side, the bulk of which, however, is going into storage for English account. This fact is a little perplexing to the Canadian shippers as the high prices ruling do not seem to place the business on a profitable basis for the Englishmen. The real secret, however, is only conjecture so far. One Canadian house claims that the late Canadian make is now eligible in the English markets in competition with a highe' class of cheese, therefore, the buyers will be able to protect themselves as they will see it in competition with other makes which have commanded better prices.

Last year considerable speculation was indulged in by English buyers to the sorrow of some of them. Appearances this autumn point to a like condition, but this seems somewhat improbable after the losses last year. Englishmen have not distinguished themselves for rushing in where they have so recently met disaster. Cheese is a trifle easier just at the present time in sympathy with the easier tone ruling in the country. To-day finest westerns are quoted at 12½c to 12⅝c and easterns at 12¼c to 12⅜c.

The receipts of cheese for the week were 58,562 boxes as against 82,349 boxes for last week and 74,492 boxes for the corresponding week of last year. Total receipts since May 1 are 461,366 boxes as against 1,639,043 boxes for the corresponding period of last year. Shipments of cheese show a large falling off for the week, owing partly to the interrupted navigation due to the heavy pall of smoke which has rendered navigation extremely dangerous in the St. Lawrence channel and partly to decreased receipts. Shipments of cheese for the week amounted to only 19,223 boxes as against 69,586 boxes for the corresponding period of last year. From Quebec there was also shipped 2,342 boxes, making total exports for the week 21,565 boxes.

Total shipments from Montreal since May 1, 1,237,067 boxes as against 1,447,808 boxes for the corresponding period of last year. Total shipments from Quebec since May 1, 48,673 boxes as against 45,830 boxes for the corresponding period of last year. Total exports since May 1, 1,285,742 boxes as against 1,493,638 boxes for the corresponding period of last year.

The butter market has gone forward during the past week, quotations now standing at 25½c in round lots and 26½c in a jobbing way. The market is steady but the export business is by no means active, a few lots of 100 to 500 packages each being taken for export at 24¾c for finest Eastern Townships and at 24¼c to 24½c for seconds. Some, however, have refused less than 25c and are waiting for that figure. The conditions, it is claimed, are different from those of a year ago, as stocks are larger now than then and it is doubtful if the English market will follow the same course as that of last year during the coming fall and winter months. A year ago creamery was selling at 25½c to 26c and farmers were getting somewhere around 25c but the situation does not warrant that figure being paid to the farmer by 1c per pound.

Receipts of butter for the week were 11,163 packages as against 10,481 packages for the previous week and 11,428 packages for the corresponding week of last year. Total receipts since May 1, 329,855 packages as against 327,516 packages for the same period of last year.

Exports of butter last week amounted to only 146 packages, as against 2,365 packages for the previous week, and 494 packages for the corresponding week of last year. Total exports since May 1, 76,793 packages, as against 65,755 packages for the corresponding period of last year.

THE PROVISION SITUATION

Toronto, October 1, 1908.

Conditions in the packing industry are not quite so critical as a week ago. The situation is easier as a result of two things, first, the high prices offered by the packers are at last bringing in something of a supply of hogs, and, second, the English market has gone off slightly and demand from that quarter is not so keen. This last might not be welcomed altogether as a directly fortunate circumstance, but in the face of last week's conditions, when the packers could not get any hogs to do business with, it seems rather more cheerful for the money is not being lost at any rate. It is rather peculiar, though, how when the British market offers a good outlet hogs are scarce in Canada and vice versa.

The past week or so the Danes have been shipping in good supplies to the British markets, about 25,000 to 30,000 weekly, and while this is not as large as the supplies taken earlier in the season, the demand seems to have fallen off somewhat for these supplies, with smaller ones from Ireland, have satisfied buyers, and even caused the market to fall a few points. Advices from Great Britain report also that the Danish shipments are likely to be large for three or four weeks to come. This will tend to keep the British market on a lower basis and to curtail Canadian shipments.

The price ruling for the past three or four weeks has been rather exceptional for this season of the year. Until the past week, however, it has been ineffectual in bringing out any material supply of hogs. Farmers at last seem to have awakened to the opportunity, however, or have gotten their hogs into somewhat presentable condition for deliveries the past few days have been a good deal better. Local business continues very good, but with the falling off of British demand and the comparatively larger deliveries, the price has sagged to some extent. Early in the week $6.75 was paid, but at time of writing anywhere from $6.25 to $6.75 is offered, according to quality. The quality of hogs offering too, is not at all of the best. Packers' stocks have gotten very low under the light deliveries of the past several weeks. This week they are beginning to stock up again.

The United States markets have been rather quiet during the past week, as is shown in the following summary from the New York Journal of Commerce: "There has been no important change in prices of hog products the last week and no general activity. It has been a manipulated market, by packers, and instead of bulling the near and selling the late months this week they have been selling the near and supporting the late. There was quite a sharp break in the former, but little change in the latter. The Cudahy Company has been the chief seller of October products and has dominated the market, while other packers have been buying some January and May products, but have not taken enough to overcome the pressure in October, resulting in a decline on the latter and not much change in the former. Receipts of hogs continued light and of poor quality and this keeps up products on BUTTER—Market has advanced, now ruling at 26c for creamery solids and 26c to 26½c for prints. Dairy remains the same as last quoted. Owing to dried up condition of pastures receipts have dropped off considerably. Locally, the demand is good.

EGGS—Locally, the demand keeps good and the volume of business is large. Prices are quoted at the same prices as last year.

BUTTER—Though no actual change in price is noted, quotations are firming up for an advance. Demand keeps up. Great Britain took some ten or twelve thousand pounds during the week, and this also tends to a stiffening in price.

EGGS—Quotations remain at 21c to 22c, though a further advance of a cent before the next week would not be surprising. Of course this quotation does not include the case. Shipments to far-away points would run a quarter-cent more than local quotations. Now that the cool weather is with us the quality of the eggs should be better than what has been coming of late.

CHEESE—Rather quiet trading is being done at old price quotations. The business is rather jerky, sales being quite frequent one week only to drop off almost entirely the following week.

THE FLOUR AND CEREAL MARKETS

Strong Feeling Prevails in All Lines With Good Outlook—Cornmeal and Feed Up in Montreal—Good Export Business.

The strong conditions noted in last reports continue with little change this week. Prices generally are unchanged, though cornmeal and a couple of lines of feed are up slightly on Montreal markets.

Business in flour, both at home and abroad is exceedingly good. This has been hampered to some extent by the stiffness at which supplies were held in the west, but with the opening of October and a change in local conditions this will not likely be much longer in evidence. Prices, however, bid fair to continue firm.

Stocks of rolled oats and oatmeal held by wholesalers and manufacturers are reported low, and with this in view it would seem advisable to anticipate future wants and thus avoid waiting for supplies later on, as seems likely to be probable under conditions in these markets.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR—Considerable activity has been displayed in this market during the week. Dealers have suddenly realized that their stocks are small and have done considerable buying to cover any exigency which may arise before the new stock is available. This activity in demand is especially the case in the country, where stocks were lightest. The market is firm and unchanged in price.

ROLLED OATS—The demand for rolled oats has been fairly good during the week and the advanced prices have been fully maintained at $2.55 per bag, and $5.35 per barrel. Gold Dust cornmeal in 98-pound bags has advanced 25c, now being quoted at $2.25 to $2.50. Ordinary cornmeal has gone forward 5c, now ruling at $2 to $2.05. There has been a good demand for these lines during the week.

FEED—The feed market is much more active this week, which is due to the depleted condition of stocks generally. Dealers are buying in larger quantities than is necessary for immediate wants. Another factor which is responsible for the impetus which the market has received is the very bad condition of the pastures owing to the continued drought. Farmers are finding it necessary to feed as the supply is not sufficient to keep the stock in good condition. Prices have changed since our last report. Manitoba shorts are now quoted as high as $27, while the minimum of $25 remains the same. Bran is slightly easier at $21 to $22. Feed flour has declined also 10c, now ruling at $1.50 to $1.60.

FLOUR—"The market is strong and business is booming," was the report given by a local miller this week. Both local and export business is exceedingly good. Prices remain on the same basis. The situation has been held firm for some time by reason of the way wheat has been held in the west. This will probably be changed somewhat this month, but the market seeme likely to remain firm for some time at least.

CEREALS — The market continues strong with no changes and fairly good business at home in evidence. Considerable export business is also being done in rolled oats and oatmeal. At present dealers' stocks are low and it would seem advisable for retailers to buy now to avoid waiting later on. The outlook continues encouraging.

Their delicious palatable flavor will appeal to those who can discriminate. Our method of baking is perfect and so is our packing. A trial order will speak more convincingly in favor of these biscuits than any argument we can set forth.

MORE UNSATISFACTORY JARS.

Coaticook Grocer Voices Complaints Similar to Others.

Here's another letter regarding unsatisfactory fruit jars, with complaints along the same lines as several others we have published this season. It seems that somebody ought to take notice.—Editor.

"Editor Canadian Grocer:

"Dear Sir,—We would like to add our word of protest to the several others which we have noticed lately in your valuable paper regarding the very unsatisfactory condition in which the Canadian fruit jars arrive. We think we are strictly within the truth when we say we have had an average of one broken or defective jar out of every two dozen we have handled this year.

"We have sold this season for the first time a few of the American Schram jars and must say we have not found thus far one imperfect jar.

Why should our Canadian manufacturers be content to put their goods up in this slip shod manner and thereby encourage the importation of the American goods?

"Yours Respectfully,

WOODMAN & McKEE,
Coaticook, Que."

TO DEVELOP CANADIAN ONION TRADE.

A. McMeans, of the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph, is in Montreal this week investigating the prospects of establishing a better onion trade in the native products. At the present time Canada imports largely from Spain, Bermuda, Egypt, Texas and Indiana, and it is with a view of supplying these demands that Mr. McMeans is now interviewing the large dealers in order to obtain their views on the subject. With a wider knowledge of the proper methods of cultivation there is no reason why the home market should not be more extensively supplied than at the present time.

FRUITS, VEGETABLES AND FISH

British Columbia Coming to the Front as a Fruit-growing Country—Enormous Fruit Shipments From Niagara District—Nova Scotia Apples to Command Big Price.

An interesting statement of the development of the fruit-growing industry of British Columbia is made by Thomas Cunningham, fruit inspector of that province. During the past 14 years the money invested in fruit-growing in British Columbia has increased from $3,000,000 to $15,000,000, which shows the advancement horticulture has made at the coast. The present year's fruit crop is estimated to be worth $1,500,000 according to Maxwell Smith, Dominion fruit inspector, and T. G. Earl, a grower at Lytton, B.C., has just received from the Federal Government an order for 400 boxes of prize-fruit for exhibition purposes in Great Britain. B. C. apples have replaced California apples because of their splendid qualities and other fruit lines, too, are supplanting the fruit from across the border in the Western markets.

Central and Eastern Canada report good business in fruit lines. Take that district known as the Niagara Peninsula. In one week 75,000 baskets of fruit went out to the various Canadian markets by rail, fully as many more went by boat from St. Catharines and Niagara-on-the-Lake. This fruit was composed principally of peaches, plums and grapes. Apples are as yet uncertain, buyers being afraid of taking large quantities. Consequently prices are fully a dollar less than in New York. Nova Scotia is said to be holding some of its apples, hoping to get big prices during the winter. Prices are not expected to go high in Great Britain this year, due to the dull times prevailing there.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS—Fruits have been in fairly good demand during the week and prices have been shaken up somewhat but taking the average have reached the same level as last week. Some lines have gone forward while some have declined. Jamaica oranges are now on the market in barrels at $4.50. California Tokay grapes are being quoted at $2.25 to $2.50 per crate. The season for cranberries is also on and supplies are arriving from the great Cape Cod district. These arrivals are quoted at $9. Grapes are slightly stronger this week. Canadian pears for canning purposes have also gone forward, now ruling at 60c to 90c. There is an undertone of firmness in the apple market. Verdelli lemons have declined slightly this week, now being offered at $2.75 to $3, instead of $3.25. Pears have firmed up somewhat, now ruling at $3.75 to $4.50, instead of $2.75 to $3.25.

VEGETABLES — Tomatoes were scarce last week comparatively, and this sent the price up 25c, now being quoted at 75c. Celery is firmer at 45c to 80c. Beets and turnips are firmer also. The demand during the week was only fair, so the upward fluctuations of the market was due to scarcity.

FISH—Fish is arriving in good supply. Haddock are coming in in better quantities and the price is lower. B.C. salmon, pike, dore, lake trout and whitefish are plentiful. Halibut is ½c lower this week. Brook trout, steak cod and market cod are also somewhat easier this week. Smoked haddies have declined a ½c since our last issue. Frozen gaspe salmon is also weaker by a ½c. In oysters "Standards," bulk have settled 10c. There is an excellent demand all along the line and the local fish men hav plenty of business.

TORONTO.

GREEN FRUITS—A fair supply of all lines is arriving on the market this week, though there is no extra quantity of any particular fruit line arriving. Prices are firm with a slightly upward tendency. Canadian peaches are getting scarce and California and Utah varieties are coming in to help fill the gap, as have Idaho primes to help out the scarcity of plums. Grapes are still cheap, though supplies are not so large as anticipated. Crab apples continue firm. They have been rather scarce all season. Citrons are arriving more freely and watermelons are going off. The latter are being sold in barrel lots. Two cars of Verdelli lemons arrived this week. These will probably be the last arrivals of the season, as the November cuts will come along a few days earlier than in the past.

Bananas are coming along more plentifully, and oranges, while not brisk in supply, are sufficient for present needs.

VEGETABLES—Tomatoes are up a little in price. While they are free in supply they are not so plentiful as a week ago. No doubt the rain and cool weather had much to do with the fewer arrivals. Potatoes have declined in price. Spanish onions are slow in movement just now, the Canadian varieties being very free. There is still a little green corn to be had, and cauliflower is fairly plentiful. Prices generally are easier than last week. Cucumber pickles do not look quite so good as earlier arrivals, but other late vegetables are of good quality, though not any too plentiful.

FISH—Supplies are freer this week, especially the sea lines. Whitefish is a little easier, and so are trout. Nova Scotia soles and soft shell crabs are the new lines among fresh fish, and shredded cod and cod tablets are new in the dried varieties. The demand is still for fresh lines, the dried and smoked being called for later on. Frogs' legs at 70c a pound are the novelty this week. Oysters are increasing in sales, and being put up in handy carrying packages they command more attention.

COMMENTS ON COFFEE VALORIZATION.

Sao Paulo Scheme Said to Be in Bad Condition—Discussed by Various Sources.

The latest information obtainable regarding the coffee valorization scheme does not appear to be of a very encouraging character. The Sao Paulo senate has passed the bill authorizing the new $75,000,000 coffee loan, and it is stated that this loan is practically underwritten by the holders of the present underlying loans. There is also going the rounds a story of big banking profits at the expense of the coffee planters whom the valorization scheme was originally intended to benefit.

The New York Journal of Commerce charges the coffee manipulators with bad faith. It declares they are "selling out—on Sao Paulo. Leading German and Austrian interests continue to make unfavorable comments on the coffee valorization loan. An important Hamburg and Havre house predicts the failure of the "corner."

On the other hand, Willett & Gray, who are supposed to speak for the valorization interests, state that "prominent banking interests in Europe are willing to take a large share of the new loan."

The Sao Paulo legislature has increased the surtax on Sao Paulo coffee from three to five francs, to go into effect on September 24th. This is the equivalent of one dollar per bag, and is incidental to the consolidation of the valorization borrowings into the $75,000,000 loan, another measure passed by the legislature being the limitation of export to 9,000,000 bags in 1909, 9,500,000 bags in 1910 and 10,000,000 bags in future years. It is proposed to have an additional duty of 20 per cent. ad valorem on coffees exported when the limits of exports already named have been reached.

Herman Sielcken, of the firm of Crossman & Sielcken, who is the representative of the State of Sao Paulo in New York, refuses to discuss the charges which are being made against the banking and other interests in connection with the valorization plan, but other interests identified with the proposition attribute the predictions of the failure of the plan to market influences.

The plan has now been in operation for a year and Sao Paulo has borrowed about $75,000,000 to carry it through. In this process it has purchased 8,000,000 bags of coffee, a large part of which has been warehoused in Europe and here. The success of the plan depends on the belief of the experts that the phenomenal production of 1906-7, which was about double a normal crop, cannot be repeated for many years to come, and the state counts on a shortage of the Brazilian crop for the next few years, which will allow the warehoused surplus to be marketed.

The foreign firm, whose circulars attacking the plan have just reached the coffee trade here, makes the claim that the Brazilian authorities are now apprehensive that their calculations of short crops to follow the bumper production of 1906-7 will not be borne out, and are now secretly selling warehoused coffee.

The Journal of Commerce says: "At least $10,000,000 of the $75,000,000 loan will be taken in New York, according to present arrangements, and will be financed through the National City Bank, and the remainder will be taken up very largely by continental houses. It is proposed to consolidate all the present loans into the new one, which will, it is understood, be distributed at about 90. This will make a nice banking commission for the National City Bank and its friends, who subscribed the $15,000,000 5 per cent. loan last year at about the same terms, and will now be able to transfer it at par into the new loan at 90. Truly Brazilian banking is showing spectacular liberality, and the coffee planters are paying the bill. The coffee loans to be consolidated include the original loan of $16,000,000 on 2,000,000 bags of coffee taken by Arbuckle Bros. and some smaller coffee houses in this city and prominent coffee and banking houses in London, Havre and Hamburg. The $15,000,000 Schroeder-National City Bank loan will also be taken over if present plans carry. The consolidated loan will also include the various other coffee loans that have been made on similar terms as the first-named loans secured by warehouse receipts for coffee."

FACTS ABOUT GROCERIES

Interesting Information for Grocers and Clerks Regarding the Goods They Sell.

The Value of Flavor.

There is no doubt that the matter of flavor counts for more with the average purchaser of food supplies than does the consideration of nutriment. People will buy what is palatable rather than what is nourishing. At first glance this may appear a very foolish procedure, but on reflection one is inclined to think that food which pleases is calculated to do quite as much good as food taken according to prescription, even though the latter may be according to the book.

Oysters are exceedingly extravagant as food, as there is practically no protein obtainable from them. Cavair, again, will not compare with the plebeian bloater as regards nutritive value. There are other points, however, to be considered than scientific theory. An invalid, for instance, may be tempted to take oysters in preference to beef steak, and although he would require to consume no fewer than 200 of these succulent bivalves to obtain the equivalent in albumen or fibrine of a pound of beef, that fact counts for nothing if the beef could not be digested. Chemical analysis of food takes no heed of the physical factor of digestion and when food is pleasing, digestion is materially aided.

Cranberries.

Cranberries play a most important part in the repertoire of all sorts of caterers at this season of the year, though little attention is given to the extent these little red berries are cultivated. The bogs and meadows of Cape Cod are the natural home of the cranberry, where they grew in a wild state until about one hundred years ago, when they were deemed worthy of cultivation. The results of the first cultivation, however were so satisfactory in the way of increased returns that other tracts were planted, until now the acreage of cultivated cranberries in the Cape Cod district amounts to more than 6,000 acres, which produced, according to statistics, upwards of 600,000 bushels of cranberries in 1900.

About 25,000 acres are now devoted to cranberry raising in the United States, but Cape Cod leads in the total output, though the acreage in New Jersey is not far from 9,000 acres at the present time. The industry has also been developed to some extent in the Maritime Provinces and there is talk of making use of the bogs in Northern Ontario for the same purpose.

In this country, cranberries are used almost exclusively for making jelly and for stewing, while abroad they are put to more varied uses. In Russia wine and other beverages are made from them; in Germany they are preserved in sugar, and in England they are kept in bottles filled with pure water and tightly corked. American berries are larger and brighter than the European variety, and large quantities of them are exported annually. The old-fashioned way of gathering the crop was by picking the berries by hand; but of late years they have been gathered with the assistance of a mechanical picker. There are several varieties of these devices, most of them being like overgrown combs with long, blunt teeth of wood or iron, with which the berries are raked from the vines. It is said that with one of these devices a person can gather about 400 quarts a day, while a handpicker cannot gather more than one-half that quantity.

Cranberries are not marketed as soon as picked as the demand for them does not begin until several weeks later. In the meantime, the fruit is stored in the bogs, the only precaution necessary being to prevent their freezing. People used to think that cranberries must be packed in casks and covered with water if they were to be kept any length of time, but that custom has disappeared.

When the fall and winter holiday season commences there is no fruit that is more in demand by all classes of people than cranberries, and in years of short crops which occur occasionally, as in 1874, the little tart, red berries command very high prices, and brought in the year mentioned $16 and upwards a barrel.

Thyme.

A dwarf herb of the mint family. One kind is botanically indicated as Thymus vulgaris, and grows wild as a bushy undershrub from six to ten inches high, with very small ovate leaves, which have an agreeable, strong and penetrating odor; but the kind cultivated in gardens is a native of the South of Europe. It loves rich sandy soil in the sun, and is more delicate in perfume than the other. The leaves should be gathered for drying at end of July or in August. It is used, both green and dried, as a warm, pungent, aromatic seasoning for soups, stews, stuffings, sauces and other culinary preparations.

SODA-CRYSTALS (WASHING SODA)

Foreign Soda Crystals—and some of English manufacture—are being extensively offered for sale in this country which are grossly adulterated with Glauber-Salts (Sulphate of Soda), a cheap product which is not only entirely useless for washing purposes, but is even likely to injure the fabrics with which it comes in contact. The Adulterated Soda-Crystals, although nominally lower in price than BRUNNER MOND'S PURE SODA CRYSTALS, are in reality much dearer owing to the large quantity of useless and injurious matter which they contain.

"Just As Good" As Canadian Canners' Are Not As Good.

In almost every line of merchandise there is some leader, in comparison with which other articles of the same class are claimed to be "just as good." The claims of other packers that their brand is "as good as Canadian Canners'" is really a compliment to our brands. The shrewd merchant at once concludes that there is nothing to be gained by experimenting and that the way to hold and increase his trade is to stock the standard lines once more.

ORDER FROM YOUR JOBBER:

BRANDS:—"Canada First" (Aylmer), "Little Chief," "Log Cabin," "Horseshoe" (Bowlby), "Auto" (Canadian Canners), "Kent," "Lynnvalley" (Simcoe), "Maple Leaf" (Delhi), "Lion" (Boulter), "Thistle" (Brighton), "Grand River" (Lalor), "White Rose" (Lakeport).

Quality Inspires Confidence

Ever since we've been in the canning industry—and we've been in it some little time now—we've made a practice of keeping the quality of our goods up to the very highest standard. And the high-water mark of quality was that we wouldn't turn out a can of goods that we might not care to have for our own personal use. Of course this meant unusually close precaution to see that none but the very cleanest and purest product entered into the contents of the cans. But we tried to look at it from the standpoint of the consumer, and we figured out that it would pay us in the end by inspiring the confidence of the consumer in the high-grade quality of our goods, and our efforts to satisfy him on a square-deal basis. This is the chief reason why are the best canned goods you can get anywhere for your money. Because we have from the first insisted on quality.

OLD HOMESTEAD

OLD HOMESTEAD BRAND CANNED GOODS are prepared from rich, ripe, juicy fruits and vegetables—sound, wholesome and clean—and we preserve their natural flavor and nutritious qualities by up-to-date canning methods and the best of white labor. These are some of the features that have made OLD HOMESTEAD BRAND the canned goods of quality—profitable to the dealer and satisfactory to the consumer. Order a sample shipment—you will appreciate their quick-sale qualities.

All good jobbers carry OLD HOMESTEAD BRAND
All the best class of customers demand it.

THE TEST OF TIME

The TEST OF TIME decides whether an article merits the confidence of the public or not. During the seventeen years we have been in business, without a single exception our sales have shown marvellous increases. Last week alone the sales of "SALADA" were 20,363 LBS.

GREATER than the corresponding week of 1907. Does this not prove that "SALADA" has the confidence of the grocer and the consumer? Is it not reasonable in view of the matchless quality and value offered? There is more real profit to the retailer in stocking and pushing goods already well-known for quality and ready sale than in any unknown goods with the attendant risks. We absolutely guarantee the sale of "Salada" and refund the full-purchase price if it does not sell.

Ottawa Grocers' Pure Food Show

A Most Successful Exhibition of Food Products in Connection With the Central Canada Fair—Local Retailers Worked Hard for the Function—A new Building Next Year—Some of the Leading Exhibits Described and Illustrated.

Once more has the Ottawa Retail Grocers' Association as a body distinguished itself, and again have the members individually proved that they are entitled to front rank among the retail grocers of the country, for the Pure Food Fair conducted by them in connection with the Central Canada Exhibition was a grand success. The grocers had been working on the proposition since last April, and they deserve every praise for the successful manner in which the whole affair was managed.

Every space was sold, manufacturers, wholesalers and agents from all over the country being represented.

A timely word must be said right here about the officials of the Central Canada Exhibition Association. Last year several suggestions were made by exhibitors and the press regarding needed improvements in the grounds and in the manner of conducting the Fair, and the public found this season that many radical changes had been made. In place of fairly good grand stand attractions and a mediocre evening entertainment there was, during the week of the Exhibition, September 16 to 26, a programme of the very finest vaudeville nature to amuse the public during the day, and one of the very latest successful comic operas as a drawing card for the evening. The result was record breaking attendance. Always worth seeing, the Fair this year was easily 75 per cent. better than any previous effort. Many improvements in the grounds were noticeable, showing that the board of directors, of which T. Cameron Bate is the energetic president, and E. McMahon the hard working secretary, had been busy.

A. G. JOHNSON,

Secretary Ottawa Pure Food Show.

The Best Fair Yet.

Everybody said that the Fair was the best yet held, and it was admitted on all sides that the first effort of the Ottawa Retail Grocers' Association was crowned with success.

Neither would have been possible had not the crowds been brought to the grounds.

Much activity was displayed by the grocers of Ottawa during the week of the Fair. On Thursday evening there was a banquet, tendered the Association by the Canadian Shredded Wheat Company. This was a most successful affair, and was well attended. After the dinner a most pleasing musical programme was rendered.

Better Building Next Year.

There was one feature in connection with the Food Fair which is open to criticism—the building. Mostly all of the exhibitors expected to show their goods in a better building than the one used, the annex to the Howick Pavilion and Lansdowne Park. It was seen as soon as the Exhibition opened that the building was unsuitable—and nobody regretted this fact as much as the Ottawa Retail Grocers' Association. The executive promptly interviewed the management of the C. C. Exhibition Association with a view to securing a better building for 1909, and this has been assured them.

There is talk of making the Howick Pavilion a Process Building, as it was originally meant to be. This is likely to be done next year, as the management of the Exhibition are considering the advisability of an open air evening show in preference to the theatrical attraction usually to be seen in the Howick Pavilion.

It is sincerely to be hoped that the Process Building will become a reality. F. W. Forde, chairman of the Pure Food Fair Committee, assured the Exhibition authorities that the Ottawa Retail Grocers' Association would see to it that the grocery trade was well represented in the building. The Annex was too small, had a low ceiling and was not properly ventilated.

Everything considered, however, highest praise is due members of the Association for the splendid results achieved in this their maiden effort.

During the week, and long before the Food Fair became a reality, the executive and members were very active. Particular praise is due F. W. Forde, chairman, and A. G. Johnson, secretary of the Food Fair. They worked day and night in the interests of the Association, and to them largely is due the magnificent success of the Fair. C. J. Prevost, treasurer, was also an indefatigable worker, while Wm. York, president of the Association, and Herb Ellis, who for nine years acted as secretary, were most active workers.

The Right Place for the Food Fair.

Someone suggested holding the Food Fair elsewhere than in the Exhibition Grounds—during Fair week. This would be a big mistake. The place to hold the Food Fair is in Lansdowne Park. Exhibitors are assured of an attendance of at least 100,000 here. Were the foodstuffs exhibited down town not nearly so many would view the exhibition.

The exhibits of various manufacturers in the Annex and the Main Building were particularly pleasing, as the illustrated descriptions which follow prove beyond a doubt.

PERSONAL.

B. Grennan, representing Woods Boston coffees, was in Toronto this week introducing a new representative, T. Wheeler Jones, who will henceforth have charge of the company's business in Ontario. Mr. Jones, though a young man, has had considerable experience in teas, as well as in coffee, having lived for some years in Colombo, Ceylon.

CHARLES GURD & CO., LTD.

A most pleasing display of soft drinks was made by Charles Gurd & Co., Ltd., Montreal. As usual, their booth attracted a great deal of attention. The crystal clearness of the many varieties shown was a point of excellence frequently commented upon by the public and by the grocers visiting the Fair. Gurd's lines are standard in Canada to-day, a reputation of nearly half a century being behind them. Gurd's famous Caledonia Water occupied a prominent place in the display. Bottled under the personal supervision of experts, this delicious table water is unequalled. Quite as popular is Gurd's apple nectar, a sparkling beverage unparalleled in the Dominion, and appreciated everywhere for its undoubted excellence. Gurd's cream soda, cherry phosphate, lemonade, orange soda, sarsaparilla, ginger beer, seltzer, potash, Scotch kola and lithia water, were among the other widely known lines on exhibition. Gurd's ginger ale was, of course, first in place of prominence, as it is in popular favor. Gold medals were awarded this company at Paris, France; Ottawa and Montreal, besides three silver and five bronze medals, and eighteen diplomas at London, Eng.; Chicago, and other centres. These awards certify the excellence of the many lines, which are put up in syphons, cylindrical and other shaped bottles. Walter Gurd was in charge of the firm's display at Ottawa.

THE WEST INDIES EXHIBIT.

C. S. Pickford, of Pickford & Black, Halifax, was in charge of a comprehensive display of the products of the British West Indies, sent up by the Exhibition Board of the Government. The exhibit was made to show the products of the islands with a view to increasing business with Canada, and, as such, was exceedingly interesting. Samples of sugar, molasses, chocolate, cocoa, coffee, lime juice, canned fruits, cigars, etc., were a surprise to most visitors, and did a good deal along educational lines in showing the possibilities of the islands.

WAGSTAFFE, LIMITED.

Breathing quality and style in every jar, the display made by Wagstaffe, Limited, Hamilton, gave one the impression that Canada most assuredly occupies a place in the front rank of manufacturers of high class marmalade, preserves and jam.

Wagstaffe's goods are not new, though the company has been doing business in Canada only a few years, for during 17 years Wagstaffe's lines were made in Manchester, England, earning there the high reputation, which, considerably enhanced, still attaches itself to all goods bearing the Wagstaffe label.

Wagstaffe's pure orange marmalade is deserving of particular mention, being made from genuine Seville bitter oranges and pure cane sugar only, by special machinery and the best of experts. Containing all the aromatic properties of the essential oils that give it such a piquant flavor, it is very much in demand by lovers of the finest and purest marmalade, and, in consequence, the grocer finds it a rapid seller—and a good profit producer. It is obtainable in cases of 1, 2, 5 and 7-lb. packages.

Really and truly, the tempting display made by this firm was remarkable. So dainty looking, so essentially pure were the preserved peaches, plums, pears, cherries, black currants and raspberries, that one's mouth watered but to look at them. And the jams were every whit as attractive. The appearance of the package put out by Wagstaffe in itself predisposes one in favor of the goods, and a trial does the rest. The firm's plum pudding and mince meat, two specialties which will soon be stocked again by the trade, were also displayed. Visitors were served with tasty dishes and given every opportunity to judge for themselves the general excellence of the goods.

Wm. R. Cummings, Cummings' Bridge, purchased the entire display of 75 cases, which illustrates the faith of the trade in the goods.

Mr. Wagstaffe was down from Hamilton for a couple of days himself, while A. G. Snowdon, of Snowdon & Ebbitt, Montreal, agents, was on hand during the Fair.

THE MAPLE TREE PRODUCERS' ASSOCIATION.

No less than five booths were used by this firm to display their many lines of maple goods. Two of the busiest men at the Fair, in consequence, were John Grimm the president, and M. F. Goddard, the manager, who were on hand personally several days to look after things. The company's booths were in three of the buildings, so that it was possible for the public to secure purest maple sugar and maple syrup anywhere on the grounds. It was "Pride of Canada" maple syrup and maple sugar which attracted the greatest amount of attention. The firm takes especial pride in maintaining the absolutely unparalleled quality of their goods, particularly this brand. The syrup being put up in bottles and tins, and the sugar in standard blocks, this brand is a most popular seller. Thousands of dollars have been spent in educating the public to buy "Pride of Canada," and the grocers of Canada are now reaping the benefit of this publicity. One point particularly worth emphasizing is that the maple goods put up by this firm are absolutely genuine, and have the really true smack of the maple. As proof of this one has but to refer to the last bulletin, on maple products, issued by the Dominion Government. This report shows that samples of the Maple Tree Producers' Association's goods were collected in every part of Canada, and tested, and every sample was found to be absolutely pure. This is a record. As will be seen from the photograph herewith produced, the arrangement of the goods was most artistic. All the company's chief lines were displayed. Creamaple, a splendid cake icing, came in for a lot of attention on the part of housewives. "Pride of Canada" maple syrup and "Pride of Canada" maple sugar are certainly becoming more popular every day.

McCORMICK'S NEAT DISPLAY.

Few Food Fairs pass without the public being once more made aware of the fact that McCormick's biscuits are "The Biscuits." Progressive at all times, this firm believes in assisting the grocer in every way possible, and finds this one of the finest means of assisting him. Their biscuits are so well and widely known, however, that it is scarcely necessary to so display them, except for the help it is to the trade. McCormick's famous Jersey cream sodas occupied just as prominent a position as ever, and, needless to say, were commented upon quite freely by lovers of something really good in biscuits. Among their other popular sellers in evidence were tourist, tea, five o'clock tea, jam-jams, Windsor, milk chocolate, mixed cakes, gingerbread and other lines really too numerous to mention. They were all there, just the same, and they were familiar lines to everybody. So much for the power of judicious advertising, backed by quality which has stood the test of years. As a high-class biscuit and confectionery house, no firm in Canada bears a more honored reputation than McCormick's. It is possible to say this to-day only through the policy of the company, maintained for years, to permit no goods to leave the factory which could not be guaranteed, and the giving of the "square deal" to the grocer at all times. The company does business from coast to coast, having branch warehouses at Montreal, Ottawa, Kingston, Hamilton, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver.

A NEAT MAPLE DISPLAY.

John E. Grimm, Montreal, had a very neat private display of maple syrup and maple sugar, which he put up in the interests of the maple products industry in Canada. It was a perfect display and attracted wide attention during the course of the Fair.

ANGLO-SAXON TEA.

Every grocer appreciates a good brand of tea, one that he can confidently stock in the knowledge that it is the best line procurable, for he knows that if there is anything a housewife dislikes and will not excuse it is to be sold inferior tea. Never was there a grocer who had cause to complain of Anglo-Saxon black or green tea on the score of customers coming back with words of anything but praise for this brand. It is put up in ½ and 1-lb. packages, and for years has given both grocer and user highest satisfaction. H. N. Bate & Son back this line of tea, which retails 25c to 50c, with their reputation. However, it may safely be stated that their good standing will never be affected by such a guarantee requiring fulfillment. When a tea has stood the test as long as Anglo-Saxon there must be quality in it or it would not last. A. Miller was in charge of the firm's booth, in which were displayed also Anglo-Saxon coffee, the 40c (retail) line, and Izzogud coffee.

OTTAWA PURE FOOD SHOW—Exhibit of Anglo-Saxon Tea.

HOLBROOK'S EXHIBIT.

A booth which aroused a considerable amount of admiration was that which was used to exhibit the high-grade sauces, pickles, vinegars, etc., made by Holbrooks, Limited, of Birmingham, England, who have a selling branch in Toronto. The booth itself was simple yet artistic, and demonstrated how attractive and inviting a good range of high-class specialties can make the appearance of a store even though the fittings may not be elaborate. Mention of the Holbrook exhibit reminds us that a little over three years ago their goods were practically unknown on this side except for the echo of their reputation which came from other parts of the world, but to-day it would be difficult to find any good grocery store in Canada without a range of the Holbrook products, especially Holbrook's sauce, and a glance at their attractive lines is sufficient evidence of their growing popularity. Their Canadian manager, Mr. H. Gilbert Nobbs, was in Ottawa last week for a few days and during the remainder of the Exhibition the booth was in charge of Mr. Crawford, their Eastern Ontario representative.

TELFER'S HIGH-CLASS BISCUITS.

One of the most interesting exhibits was that of Telfer Bros., Ltd., Collingwood, known to the grocery trade as makers of high-class biscuits. The booth occupied by this firm was one of the most attractive at the Fair, being most artistically arranged and at all times brilliantly illuminated. But it was not the booth alone which attracted the thousands passing through the building. The 250 odd lines of biscuits manufactured by this progressive concern commanded the largest share of attention. And such choice lines were those on display that the average housekeeper was most anxious to sample them. This sort of thing very materially assists the grocer in making sales. Some of the lines displayed were Telfer's peerless cream sodas, the great favorites; water thin wafers, arrowroot, ginger snap, Vanilla wafers, oatmeal crackers, Graham wafers, all in the famous 10c packages which are so popular. Then there was to be seen fruit cake in one and two-pound packages, peel, Sultana and pound cakes, in fact, so many lines of high-class fancy biscuits were there it would be difficult to enumerate them all. The majority of the lines were shown in tins with glass fronts. These look very attractive on the shelf. The number of visiting grocers who left orders, "repeats" at that, is the best indication of the merit and popularity of these biscuits. They are great sellers.

THE BEST REFRIGERATORS.

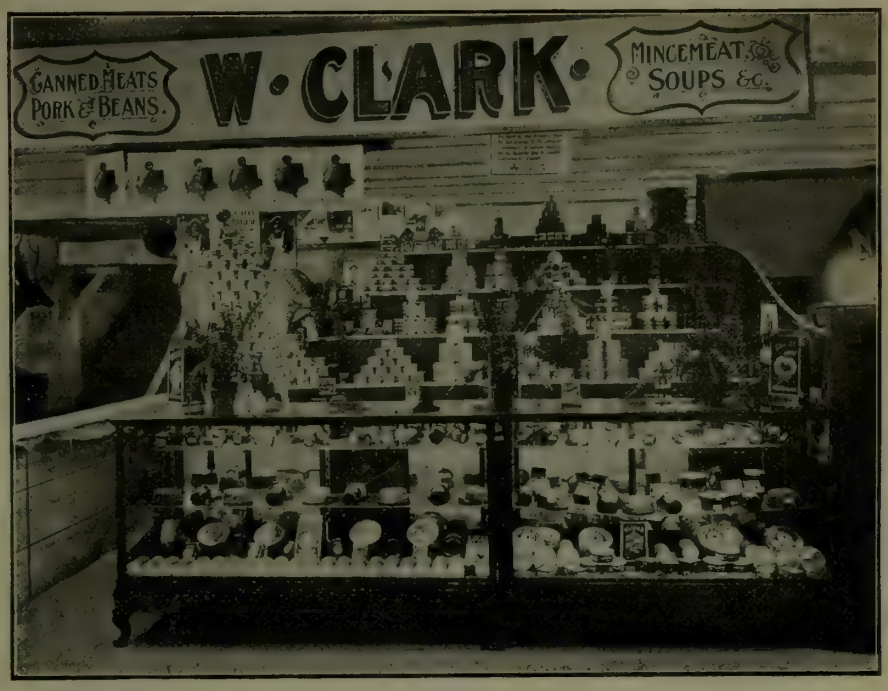
"The Best" Refrigerator, the refrigerator backed by a guarantee, was shown in the Lansdowne Building by the Barnet Mfg. Co., Renfrew. This firm makes refrigerators of all kinds for all purposes, and the members of it take particular pride in the undoubted excellence of the line they turn out. "The Best" Refrigerator is constructed on scientific principles. There is free circulation and absence of odors; freedom from moisture; cleanliness and ease in keeping clean; coldness and low uniform temperature, 36 to 48 degrees; perfect ventilation; pure dry air; economy in ice consumption, and snow-white baked enamel lining as cardinal points in favor of this particular refrigerator. Surely one, upon being assured of these points, would feel safe in the thought that in "The Best" he was purchasing the finest refrigerator made in Canada to-day!

The manufacturers have a refrigerator which they can guarantee. The insulation is perfect, there being eight walls to protect the ice and maintain a low uniform temperature in the inside. The Barnet Company's own Syphon and Ventilation System, which no other manufacturer can use, ensures perfect ventilation. Imagine being able to place indiscriminately on the top shelves, onions and butter, melons, fish or other such odorous foods! This is quite possible with "The Best." Drainage is perfect, the drip pipe being placed in the bottom of the refrigerator and being only three inches long. Thus, the long, slimy drainage pipe is dispensed with, and it is only necessary to keep the short drain pipe and the drip pan underneath clean. The company grants a twenty-day free trial. Mr. Cummings was down from Renfrew to look after the exhibit.

CENTRAL CANADA EXHIBITION— Display of Barnet Mfg. Co., Renfrew.

WM. CLARK, MONTREAL.

Wm. Clark, Montreal, was one of the first to take space in the Pure Food Fair Building. Mr. Clark is always first in what he undertakes. It is the same way with the many lines of canned meats he puts on the market under his label. They have each and every one of them, from concentrated soups to pork and beans, got a reputation for excellence which cannot be surpassed by any firm, and which is equalled by very few indeed. Grocers in every part of Canada have for years been selling the products of Wm. Clark, and never in all the time they have stocked these goods have they had cause for complaint on the score of quality.



OTTAWA PURE FOOD SHOW—Exhibit of Wm. Clark, Montreal.

Clark's corned beef, lunch tongue, roast beef and pork and beans were given prominent position in the attractive display, while the now famous Inglass brand of sliced smoked beef ox tongue and mince meat were most favorably commented upon by the thousands who visited the Exhibition. Among the other lines manufactured by Wm. Clark might be mentioned jellied hocks, Cambridge sausage, Paragon ox tongue, boneless pigs' feet and jellied veal.

But, bear in mind, these are a very, very few of the many different lines of canned meats which are sold by wholesale and retail grocers throughout the Dominion. To give a complete list would require too much time and space.

"Bert" Clark was his father's representative at the Fair, and certainly looked after the firm's interests very ably.

THOS. J. LIPTON.

Thousands of samples were distributed by Thos. J. Lipton, who occupied a booth about the centre of the Lansdowne Building. Here Lipton's famous tea, known everywhere in Europe, America and all other countries, was shown and demonstrated. Cingalese attendants, dressed in their own quaint way, served thousands of visitors with a tasty and nourishing demi-tasse. They immediately suggested to one wonderful times. Much credit is due Mr. Snowdon (Snowdon & Ebbitt, Canadian agents), for the very pretty display made. The photograph here reproduced gives one a good idea of it. Rowat's Worcestershire sauce, preserved walnuts, chow-chow, gherkins and white onions were also shown.

He supervises the growing, picking and packing of Lipton's famous teas, "sold in air-tight tins only," as the complete advertising literature of Thos. J. Lipton states. Lipton's coffee, ever a ready seller, was shown, as was also Lipton's jelly tablets. These are becoming more and more popular with Canadian housekeepers every day, and, consequently, with the grocer. It is only necessary to dissolve them in hot water to prepare a very dainty dessert. Lipton's other specialties, including pickles, gherkins, chow-chow and preserved walnuts were displayed, too.

A. E. Carson, Canadian manager for Thos. J. Lipton, spent three days in Ottawa during the Fair, and was frequently seen at the booth. He reports magnificent increases in sales, as compared with those of a year ago.

ROWAT & CO.

It is a number of years since A. G. Snowdon first went into a grocery house and sold an order of Rowat's pickles and olives. That first sale may have been a difficult one to make, but the orders came after that with surprising frequency and were greater in size until hundreds of carloads are placed in Canada to-day. Unless this Glasgow factory was able to deliver the goods, if their pickles and olives were not of the very highest quality, scientifically put up, such a trade could not have been worked up even in a century. Every housewife knows and appreciates Rowat's pickles and olives, which are obtainable in packages of standard size. The grocer finds himself able to recommend them at all

SEPTEMBER FRUIT CROP REPORT.

The Agricultural Department's fruit crop report, which is being issued from Ottawa this week, shows fairly favorable conditions for the fruit yet to be harvested, a summary of the report presents conditions as follows:

The weather conditions have been fairly favorable for plums, peaches and grapes, but not for pears and winter apples.

Apples—Early and fall fruit is nearly all harvested, the winter fruit ripening prematurely and dropping, reducing the crop already below medium.

Pears—Are ripening rapidly and are of good quality. Exports to Great Britain are larger than usual.

Peaches—The crop is all harvested, but a few late varieties. Prices have been below the average.

Plums—Are nearly all harvested, except in Northern districts.

Grapes—There is a full crop of excellent quality. Prices lower than for several years.

Tomatoes—Have ripened too rapidly for the canning factories, but are of excellent quality.

Cranberries—There is a good crop. There is a demand for the Canadian berries in the United States.

Insects and fungous diseases have developed slightly this month. Pink rot has developed to a serious extent, especially among apples.

Winter apples in the United States have depreciated in quantity and quality. Prices for Canadian pears and apples in Great Britain have been good and shipments larger than usual.

AMENDING NEW SOUTH WALES FOOD LAW.

Changes Made Will Benefit British Columbia Salmon Canners.

Canadian Trade Commissioner for Australasia, J. S. Larke, writing from Sydney recently, reports that amendments have been made in the New South Wales Pure Food Law, recently passed, which make it more agreeable to Canadian packers of canned salmon. One clause of the law rendered it obligatory that canned goods should have stamped upon the end the name of the packer and the year in which the packing took place. But as this clause seriously affected the canned salmon trade from British Columbia, representations were made to the Premier having regard to the impracticability of such a restriction.

The bill was re-introduced a few days ago and the Premier has made the changes which he promised. The clause now reads:—'Except in the case of a package of food which has been exempted from any or all of the provisions of this section by the regulations, there shall be legibly and durably written on or attached to every package of food packed or enclosed for sale a statement or label indicating the trade name or description, the net weight or the number, true measure or volume of the contents thereof, and the name and address of the vendor, as well as the name and address of the maker of such contents or of the agent thereof or of the owner of rights of manufacture. No person shall, after the expiration of six months from the commencement of this act, sell in a package any food unless such a statement or label is written on or attached to such package as required by this section.'

Respecting the weight, another clause of the bill provides that:—

'Weights and measures closely approximating those indicated on the statement or label will be allowed, but the degree of approximation may be fixed by the regulations, either generally or with respect to particular articles of food.'

This change covers the objection of the Canadian salmon canners, but objection is still taken to the difficulty of having the name and address of the vendor upon the package. It is probable that the bill will be further amended in this respect and also in respect to the clause affecting the sale of advertised medicines.

TEA BUSINESS IN THE WEST INDIES.

Trade Commissioner Presents Opportunity to Canadian Merchants.

Canadian Trade Commissioner in Barbadoes, E. H. S. Flood, writing under date September 15, reports an opening in the West Indies for good business for Canadian tea merchants. Speaking of importations of tea into the islands, he says:—"The bulk of the importation comes from the United Kingdom and the remaining portion from the United States and Canada. Black teas are the favorites and are chiefly imported, with only a small quantity of green. About three-quarters of the import appears to be Ceylon tea, practically all in package form, in pounds, half-pounds and even in ounce packages. A few years ago tea was imported principally in bulk; at the present time, package tea has quite replaced it.

"Tea drinking is becoming quite general in these islands. I am assured that this is due partly to the improved purchasing power of the tenantry, as the blacks are called, and partly to the manner in which the tea is placed on the market, viz.: in small packages, thus making it possible to expend but a small amount on this article at one time. The market for tea is becoming increasingly better as a result of the unusually prosperous times these islands have of late experienced."

A new field is thus offered for Canadian enterprise and the importance of the opportunity should be appreciated by Canadians. Tea, which a few years ago was purchased only by the upper classes, is now being used by all classes alike. There is an increasing demand to which the attention of the Canadian tea merchant should be directed.

CANADIAN CIDER FOR GREAT BRITAIN.

Favorable Opening for Our Manufacturers—The Demand Steadily Increasing.

W. A. MacKinnon, Canadian Trade Commissioner in Bristol, in this week's report from the trade and commerce department, speaks of opportunities in Great Britain for Canadian cider manufacturers.

"From time to time," he says, "Canadian Trade Commissioners have reported on the opening for good Canadian cider afforded by British markets. It has been pointed out that only a first-class article will meet with a ready and constant demand here, and that even then the best Canadian cider might have for a time to find its chief use in blending with English cider.

The industry here, as is well known, has been brought in certain counties to a high degree of perfection, and is assisted by the experiments carried on under the auspices of the National Fruit and Cider Institute. These experiments have involved the trial of a great number of varieties of apples (and concurrently of pears for the making of Perry) and an infinite number of blends in varying quantities: in fact it seems to be accepted that the choicest commercial ciders are always the result of blending, though some varieties of apples produce by themselves a most acceptable beverage.

"The Board of Agriculture has recently issued a bulletin on 'Cider Orchards,' from which the following is an extract:—'The future welfare of the cider-making industry depends upon a large increase in the planting of fresh orchards during the course of the next few years. Probably the majority of the existing orchards have long passed their best days and are now dying out; and few are being planted to fill their places. In unfavorable seasons the supply of fruit is by no means equal to the demand, with the result that prices are high and it is difficult to manufacture pure cider at a reasonable profit. The present state of affairs points to a regular and more serious shortage of cider fruit within a few years, and this, unless something be done, means a decline of the industry from the position it now occupies.'

"It would appear from this that if Canadian cider makers enter seriously and scientifically upon the task of supplying British markets with a first-class product, the demand is likely to increase rather than fall off, even in years when the English crop and quality are satisfactory. It may be well to repeat that the practice of cider drinking is on the increase in this country. It would not be difficult for any Canadian manufacturer to obtain samples of some of the most popular makes of cider, as known in Devonshire, Somersetshire, and other famous cider counties."

ANOTHER FRUIT JAR COMPLAINT.

Editor Canadian Grocer: We have noticed a great many complaints in your valuable paper about our Canadian fruit jars. We also wish to add our experiences in this matter. We have been handling these jars for years, and a good many of them. We have made very little profit on them, but have received a good many complaints from our customers. We have found at least one dozen damaged or broken jars in every gross that we have sold.

Could it not be arranged among dealers to have an agreement in buying these jars so that the damaged ones might be replaced or have the amount of loss allowed on the invoice? We think all dealers agree with us that something must be done if we continue to handle these Canadian jars.

We might also state that the condition of the boxes in which the jars are packed can be compared with the quality of the jars.

VANCOUVER'S PURE FOOD SHOW.

Retail Grocers' Association Arranging Exhibition for Next Week.

Vancouver will have a Pure Food Show on October 12th to 17th in the Dominion Hall, under the direct management of the Vancouver Retail Grocers' Association. The show was a splendid success in every way last fall, but arrangements are now under way which should ensure it being a bigger and greater success than ever this year. Pure food shows are popular throughout the country, and judging from the crowds which attended last fall, it appeals as strongly in Vancouver as elsewhere.

Already quite a number of exhibitors' spaces have been sold, and those remaining will be allotted as orders arrive, with no reservations. W. J. C. Hunter, credit manager and secretary of the Vancouver Retail Grocers' Association, has charge of all details in connection with the show.

Levi Davis, a gardener at Rideau Ferry, near Smith's Falls, Ont., has a hundred bushels of onions, each of which measure from 14 to to 15 inches in circumference.

BUTTER AND EGGS ARE CLIMBING

The price of butter and eggs all over the country is showing a general advancing movement, and this is true also, though to a less extent, of cheese, honey and provisions.

The butter situation is following pretty closely along the lines prevailing since the commencement of summer, and is bearing out the prediction made early in the season. For months creamery butter has steadily held its own between 24c and 26c in the larger eastern Canadian markets, and now with the coming of cooler days the markets are firming up for an advance. Reports from various sections of Canada bear out this statement. Prices are not anticipated to go so high as last winter, but they may be expected to come within striking distance of last year's figures. What will tend to keep prices a little lower than last winter is the fact that there has been a much larger make this year, farmers who supplied cheese factories a year ago having this season turned their attention to the creameries. The farmer's lot was a comparatively easy one, too, this season. He had simply to wait at home for the buyer who offered the highest price. Commission man, wholesaler, retailer and consumer went up and down the country buying butter to the immediate benefit of the farmer, though this was rather detrimental to the business of the commission merchant.

A great deal of the butter bought would have been sent to Great Britain, but the high price paid in the first instance precluded the possibility of exporting and giving a profitable return to the dealer. Consequently, rather large supplies were placed on the Canadian markets. The consuming public, however, suffering from a dearth of butter at famine prices during the past winter, readily paid what was asked, and so saved the situation. Commission men were unwilling to pack at the high prices, but realizing the fact that prices would not come down and that a large native consuming demand was growing, eventually had to pack at prevailing prices.

Retailers, too, had done not a little storing, and as the charges for this are very light—about a cent a pound for eight months—it is believed that supplies are fairly large. Certainly they are a great deal larger than a year ago; and if so, prices will hardly soar so high as they did then. On the other hand, dealers who bought at a fairly high price can hardly be expected to sell without making some slight profit. Taking into account the increased demand for butter during the winter months, and if to the present price storage and other charges are added, it is likely the wholesale price for creamery butter will not be far below 30c a pound during the coming winter season.

As to eggs, practically the same conditions hold good, as prevail in the butter markets, with this difference, however, that probably the egg situation is in a slightly more advanced stage. Eggs are not now and have not been for several years exported to the Old Country, the local demand and consequent high prices shutting out almost entirely this feature of the egg business. During the summer supplies were free, but the demand for eggs was pretty great, due, no doubt, to the high prices of meats and provisions. As was to be expected, the hot weather was responsible for a high rate of shrinkage, and it is only now with the cooler weather, that this shrinkage is showing any appreciable lessening. As it is, however, the shrinkage at present in Ontario is about a dozen and a half to the case. This shaves pretty close the profit to be made on eggs, especially as the dealer has to take so many chances. On account of the high prices, eggs were not put away until quite late in the season. There is not, however, the large stock there is in the butter line, and since the cooler days have come supplies have dropped off somewhat. This, with the higher prices demanded by farmers, will undoubtedly boost prices, and at present is doing so. During the past three weeks eggs have gone up two cents, and when the time comes that supplies are short and dealers must draw on their reserve in cold storage, the price will be pretty close up to that asked for butter.

THE GROCER AND THE ELECTIONS

In view of the approaching elections the old difficulties regarding business men's participation in politics becomes a live question. Whenever things of this nature crop up it is always a good plan to get the views of successful business men regarding them, because it may be taken for granted that they have pursued the right course, or else they would not have been successful. Of course, a man's politics are not so liable to become a topic of the tea table conversation in a city as in the smaller country towns.

The opinions which we have heard enunciated are all about the same when summed up. Some grocers said they took no part whatever in politics; some voted quietly; some were very outspoken in their political allegiance, and some, it is said, although I have them yet to encounter, were offensively partizan. To vote is a national duty, and no man should try to avoid it, but it is exactly the same with this as with many other things in life—it is the way and manner in which it is done. Take for example, a man who is so self-opinionated that his views of life are narrowed down to very fine limitations, it is exceedingly difficult for him to see the two sides of anything, except a dollar bill, and the chances are that he cannot talk politics or anything else without giving offense. On the other hand, there is the man who can see both sides of the question, and who respects other people's views, and he does not offend, even if he may have a discussion with a customer. Sometimes there is a peculiar respect engendered among men for one another by virtue of the fact that they hold different views, and when they are broad-minded enough to look upon such conditions in the proper light. It is a poor man, indeed, who has no convictions at all in such matters, and shows a lack of proper interest in national affairs. All this goes to show that a merchant may have his own views on certain subjects, but it is wise for him to abstain from thrusting them too strenuously upon those whose patronage he enjoys.

RATHER ANNOYING.

A Canadian special delivery stamp on a letter addressed to a point in the United States, or a United States special delivery stamp on a letter mailed in the latter country for Canada does not insure its quick delivery. It is delivered as if it had only an ordinary 2c stamp affixed.

There have been some specific instances lately where lack of knowledge in this respect has caused delay and annoyance to business men.

To ensure special delivery of a letter mailed in one country for delivery in the other, the envelope must bear the special stamp of the country to which it is sent. To procure this stamp is not always either easy or convenient.

This is a matter which should receive attention from the Post Office Department of the two countries. If a 2-cent stamp insures a letter being delivered in either country in the ordinary way, why should not the special delivery privileges be accorded to a letter when the special delivery stamp of the country from which it is sent is attached ?

KEEP THE STORE WELL LIGHTED.

The lighting of a store is always a problem. Both daylight and artificial light should be supplied in an ample degree. In the congested quarters of the cities it is not always possible to get sufficient daylight, but it is always possible to have a good quantity of artificial light. When the days get short, the well-lighted store is the one that commands attention, and beginning at the front door, which should always be well lighted, the window should be resplendent, of course, taking for granted the dressing is attractive, otherwise the lights ought to be as dim and few as possible. The efficacy of good lighting in the store itself is obvious. First, there is the psychological effect on the customer when he comes into a flood of light where everything seems to speak a welcome full of warmth. Secondly, in ill-lighted stores dirt and rubbish are more likely to collect and lead to an unsanitary condition. Thirdly, there is the general satisfaction to be derived from working in a well-lighted store, as compared with work anywhere in a dim and insufficient light. Electricity is undoubtedly the best form of light, as it is the cleanest, least cumbersome and most easily taken care of, requiring very little attention. Gas and acetylene come next, and coal oil last. There are many kinds of acetylene plants, and some of them give a very brilliant light, but they require considerable attention.

THE SITUATION IN THE WEST.

The Western Viewpoint, by our Special Correspondent.

Winnipeg, Oct. 5.—At the close of the first month of the crop year of 1908 there has passed inspection at Winnipeg 10,339,350 bushels of wheat, or a little over one-tenth of the estimated crop. This is a new high record in grain movement and is marvellous in view of the fact that the C.P.R., the road having the greatest mileage in the wheat belts, was hampered by a strike, that is now two months old. The total number of cars of all grains carried was 11,018. This was against 7,085 in the September of 1906, and 6,283 in the September of 1905. Comparison is not made with 1907, because harvest was too late last year for anything of a record to have been made at crop movement in September. In 1906 and 1905, however, harvest began rather earlier than this year, there having been cutting as early as August 8 in 1905. In spite of this heavy movement there is a constant complaint of car shortage. This is mainly due to the fact that so many farmers have been able to thresh early this year, September having a practically unbroken record for fine weather, and the rush of wheat to market has been beyond all precedent and very naturally the railways were not in a position to handle it. In addition to this the C.P.R. had 42 engines and a large number of cars tied up on construction of the double track from Winnipeg to Fort William. The company wisely refused to take the trains off until the 250 miles from Winnipeg eastward was complete and ready for use, feeling that what time was lost in crop movement before October 5th would be more than made up after that date. Your correspondent has it officially that the bulk of the work trains will be released for grain movement to-day, though the public announcement in the Winnipeg papers will not be made for some days yet. When these engines and cars are put on the western wheat things will go with a rush, and the railway being able to use the 250 miles of double track without a break and the balance of the 420 with the exception of a break of nine miles where some heavy filling-in is required, will not only get their cars to lake terminals more readily. but will be able to return them to the wheat belts much more quickly.

Though so large a volume of wheat has already been moved, it is too early to talk about the improvement on the financial situation. A large amount of the grain sent forward has not yet been finally disposed of and though, no doubt, the farmers have received a percentage, they have not received all that that amount of wheat represents in money. In another week or ten days there should be good accounts from the wholesale houses.

The wheat market has continued somewhat of a mystery to dealers, owing to what would seem abnormal strength in the light of the indifference of British buyers and the fact that during the past week they have shown more disposition to place orders for January and February deliveries of Argentine wheat than to purchase Manitoba. At the same time any additional strength in Manitoba (and the market was a strong one all week) seems to be reflected in Liverpool. With the rapid increase of receipts that may be looked for this coming week, the world's visible climbing up and the world's shipments increasing rapidly, a break would seem in order, but though the market occasionally breaks a little, it quickly goes back again because every break brings out not speculators, but buyers of actual wheat.

One of the features of the past week has been the enormous increase in the export flour trade, which has picked up wonderfully in the last ten days. The Assiniboia, sailing from Fort William on Wednesday morning, carried 2,200 tons of flour, almost all of it for export, and flour trains are pulling into Fort William every day. The Lake of the Woods Milling Co., at Keewatin, is receiving wheat at the rate of 100 cars daily, and though it is not so easy to check the Ogilvies, they are no doubt receiving just about the same amount. The Western Canada Flour Mills at St. Boniface is also busy and the rebuilt mills of the Maple Leaf Flour Milling Co., at Kenora, is being rushed in order to grind this crop.

Moose Jaw is putting up a splendid 1,000-barrel mill, which is really an addition to the mill that has been established at that point for some time.

The cattle trade shows few changes during the past few weeks. There has been a complaint of shortage of cars for cattle also, and it is claimed that there are still 20,000 head to come out this fall. If this is correct the year 1908 will be a banner one in export cattle, as already more have been shipped than for the whole season of 1907. Prices have been low, owing to the drop in the British market, but as there is some slight improvement there, prices here may stiffen a little. It is expected that cattle, as well as wheat, will move more quickly this coming week.—H.

A new variety of fruit, called nartjes, somewhat in the nature of an orange, with an outward appearance of a quince and yet quite different from either, is being shown on the London, Eng., market. The nartjes comes from South Africa.

THE "PURE FOOD" GROCERY

Would It Pay to Sell Only Guaranteed Goods?—How It Should Work Out in Actual Practice.

Some time ago I wrote an article on "Pure Food." In it I tried to show how much better a man's conscience felt when he sold "straight" groceries. I even quoted Emerson, "The reward of a thing, well done, is to have done it," trying to show that it was sufficient reward to a grocer, who had gone to great pains to sell only pure goods, to have the satisfaction of knowing he was a public benefactor. But all my theories fell to the ground when an old grocer, after reading my essay, said: "If you want to get the grocers to take up the idea of selling pure goods only, you must show them, demonstrate plainly, that they can make more money that way."

The Trade Paper and How it Helps.

Why do merchants read a trade paper, anyway? To get market reports and new light and new ideas on their particular line of business. It isn't always the new ideas that help the most, though sometimes the old ideas are presented differently, sometimes you knew a thing was right, but had never adopted it, perhaps reading it again will lead you to use it. It's the same with advertising. The public know in a sort of a way that you have a grocery store, and sell good goods, but assertive advertising, quoting prices, leads them to patronize you.

The Same With the Other Question.

It's the same with this Pure Food question? You all think it's a good thing in regard to jams, syrups, etc., but are rather doubtful as to whether handling nothing but guaranteed groceries from cellar to roof would pay.

Just suppose, for example, two men, A and B, were engaged in the grocery business in the same town. A has a reputation for high-class groceries that is not confined to high price fancy goods, but every article in the store can be depended on as absolutely pure. If A is doubtful about anything, he has it analyzed and will allow nothing to be sold he does not personally know to be above suspicion. He doesn't do nearly as much business as B, but as his profits are larger in a year's time he makes exactly the same amount of money. B is all for big sales, hurry and splash. The quality of the goods doesn't worry him so long as the price is low and his customers don't complain too frequently. To illustrate: A traveler carried different grades of spices, vinegars, etc., and B, invariably bought the lowest priced grade, even though assured it was not "straight." His reply was, "Oh, folks round here won't know the difference," which was true enough for quite a number, but their health would suffer when it was too late.

An Interesting Question.

Suppose B is that kind of a man. At the end of a year won't A be far ahead, even though their profits were the same? A has a reputation for quality that could not be purchased with money.

There is a great deal of pleasure in selling a high-class article, a nice fat profit for yourself, a satisfied customer and likely a repeat sale.

I believe in grocers branding and guaranteeing standard articles, such as tea, coffee, extracts, baking power, etc. Ascertain by chemical analysis, if necessary, that they are pure, then put your own name on them and stand behind them.

Work for the Associations.

Grocers' associations are doing a great deal of good all over the country, such as organizing for collection of bad debts, protection against combines and unfair competition, and bettering trade conditions, and they could do an even greater work by employing a chemist to determine the purity of the various staples and advertised brands of groceries that are on the market, having the results published among the grocers, and combining together to educate the public as to the relative merits of the various articles without fear or favor.

In the meantime, it would be a great honor as well as very profitable to be known as the "Pure Food Grocer" of your town or city.

EXTENDING THEIR BUSINESS.

W. H. Millman & Sons, wholesale grocery brokers, 27 Front St. E., have just completed arrangements to take over the whole of the large building, where their offices now are, which has been for some years known as the Dixon Storage warehouse. They take possession of this building on November 1st, in addition to their already successful brokerage business. With their promptness and reliability in all their business, they, no doubt, will do well with the new undertaking. Merchants and shippers throughout the country, anticipating storage, could not deal with a better firm, and the location of this building is the very best in Toronto. They solicit business for all kinds of merchandise. A new advertisement, announcing the addition to the business, appears on page 49 of this issue.

TRADE NOTES.

Thirteen carloads of Kettle River Valley (B.C) apples have been exported to Australia. Besides filling local demand the valley will market over thirty carloads of fruit at outside points.

Clark & Reid, Ottawa, have recently been appointed selling agents in that city for the Robert Greig Company, Toronto, and have already secured a large number of orders for "White Swan" goods. With this agency they should make the sale of White Swan coffees, spices, cereals, etc., larger than ever.

Secretary Gillett, of the New York State Fruit Growers' Association, states that the apple crop in that State is 93 per cent. of last year's crop, and 60 per cent. of average crop. The counties bordering on Lake Ontario have a full average crop of the best quality, while the Hudson River Valley counties have a small crop of medium quality.

With a view to increasing the consumption of salt-water fish in the inland Provinces of the Dominion, an Order-in-Council has been passed empowering the Dominion Government to defray one-third of the cost of express rates on shipments of fish to the West from the Maritime Provinces. This payment is in the nature of a subsidy for part of the year to the fishing industry of the East, and should prove a great boon to parts of the Dominion where there is at present great difficulty in getting any good supply of fresh sea fish. The reduction in the cost of transportation will apply throughout the fall shipping season.

PERSONAL NOTES.

J. P. Gallagher, representing Alp. Raymond, formerly J. A. Perrault & Co., Montreal, importers of jams, jellies, pickles, etc., was a caller on the jobbing trade of Toronto and Hamilton this week.

J. W. Windsor, of Montreal, left Saturday last for Winnipeg on a business trip, where he is placing Ice Castle Brand canned goods and Balmoral pure jam jellies and marmalades on the market.

The largest cargo of apples ever carried from Halifax to Liverpool was taken a few days ago by the steamer Halifax City. It consisted of 17,099 barrels of the choicest Nova Scotia apples. It is not unusual to send large apple cargoes to London, but Liverpool has never before called for such a large shipment. London is taking great quantities of Nova Scotia apples at present.

HINTS TO BUYERS.

Reading notices under this heading will be accepted at 10 cents per agate line.

A new company now doing business in Montreal is the Dominion Cocoa & Chocolate Co., 16 Place Royale. The firm offers the trade "Favorite" brand cocoa, which is put up in ½-lb. tins, and also in 10-lb. canisters and in bulk. Absolutely no adulterants are used in the making of this line.

Schlesinger Bros. & Co., Montreal, are selling Maestrini milk chocolate more freely than ever before. This line is made in Switzerland, the factories being located in the finest dairying districts. The candy is most attractively wrapped.

QUEBEC MARKETS

Montreal, October 8, 1908.

POINTERS—

Fish—Easier.
Cheese—Easier.
Butter—Firm.
Spices—Advanced.
Vegetables—Advanced.
Fruits—Advanced.
Sugar—Firm.

The past week has not been any too bright and trade in all lines is somewhat slack. The high butter market and the prospects of it going still higher is certainly not a pleasing aspect of the market for those who have to provide for families. Vegetables and fruits have gone forward slightly, and this has given an impetus to the canned vegetable trade, which is brighter than for a long time. Canned fruits, however, do not seem to have been benefited in the same way, but this may be due to the fact that they are more of a luxury, and can be bought even under wider fluctuation in price than vegetables, which are a necessity. Sugar remains the same in price, although the demand has largely fallen off. Japan teas are active, also the better grades of coffee. A good business is passing in all kinds of fish. Provisions are firm and in good demand. The high prices for molasses have somewhat checked the demand for that commodity. Spices are active. The new dried fruits arriving are opening up well. Collections cannot be said to be more than fair.

SUGAR—The sugar market is much duller than at last report. The price, however, remains the same. There is an undertone of uncertainty to the market. Refiners are not sure that it will react along ordinary lines as it has shown many surprises during the year. In many cases it has failed to do what was expected of it.

There is some little trade passing in the cheaper grades, otherwise the market is dull. Quotations have not altered.

DRIED FRUITS—A remarkable feature in the dried fruit markets this season has been the almost total absence of serious fluctuation. Prices have been steady with very slight changes since the opening. The last direct steamer from the Mediterranean, the Jacona, has now completed loading at Denia and should reach Montreal with a full cargo early in November. Belated orders from Mediterranean ports are still coming in via Liverpool and should reach here before navigation closes. Quotations on dates from London ex. first tide steamers are on a very reasonable basis, showing disposition on the part of London shippers to make an effort to recover the business which they lost under the ad valorem duty, but which they now have a chance of securing since the change to the specific rate. Tarragona almonds have strengthened somewhat, which condition has not been anticipated, as opinions in general were that this market would become easier. Filberts are firm and reports from the Messina exchange indicate a possibility of them remaining so.

Other lines remain the same as at last quotation. Demand for all kinds of spices is good owing to the pickling season now being on.

CANNED GOODS

There is very litle new to record this week regarding the general situation. The rivalry between the independent companies and the Canadian Canners continues, though nothing of this is on the surface, except in the West. The real situation will hardly show itself till later in the season. Some of the factories seem anxious to get rid of their stock of tomatoes, and, judging from this and other circumstances, one is pretty safe in concluding that the tomato pack has been generally large. How the situation will work out remains to be seen.

MONTREAL.—Peas, beans, tomatoes and corn are in good demand. Canned fish is also in good demand, but meats, both Canadian and American, are somewhat neglected. Fruits also are not active, owing to the season for fresh stock now being at its height.

TORONTO.—While a large part of the goods have already been sold there is good demand this week for canned vegetables. Business in canned meats seems to have dropped off a little since the cold weather has set in.

WINNIPEG.—There is no change in the local situation. Corn, peas and tomatoes are still being sold at very low figures, and there is no sign of the end of this competition in prices.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

POINTERS—

Sugar—St. Lawrence declined 10 points.

Teas—Ceylons firmer in primary markets.

Butter—Advancing.

Eggs—Firmer.

Collections—Fair.

Toronto, October 7, 1908.

Not a great deal of change is noticeable in the wholesale markets this week and business continues along about the same lines. Business in California fruits is fairly good and new raisins and currants are in pretty fair demand. Other lines are only passing as usual, and while the jobbers speak hopefully, things are seemingly a litle quiet.

About the only noticeable change during the week was a decline of 10 cents on St. Lawrence sugars, which occurred on Wednesday afternoon. At the time of writing the other companies had not followed, the decline, and, indeed, there was no official notice of the decline. New crop Western Ontario beans are on the market.

SUGAR—The only change of the week was the decline in St. Lawrence noted above. As official notice of the change had not been received at time of writing local prices had not changed. It is expected, however, that the other companies will follow, and the decline be general. This decline followed immediately on the report of a 10-cent decline on the New York market on Wednesday morning.

Business has been rather dull in sugar since the close of the preserving season, and the markets have eased off a little as a result. Before this week's decline prices were on a basis 30 points above the market at this time last year, and it seemed likely there would be a falling off to some extent at least. Retailers would do well to curtail their purchases for some little time at least.

Willett & Gray, reviewing the raw market, say:

"In the absence of sales during the week under review the market quotations remain nominally unchanged, although efforts to sell a cargo of Javas at the current quotations failed for want of a buyer and the sugar is going into warehouse rather than meet buyers' views at a lower level. The outcome of the present inactivity depends upon Europe to a large extent and the beet sugar markets have shown a small receding tendency, October being quoted at 9s 6d, against 9s 7½d last week. The fluctuations are small under continued reports of favorable weather for the beet crop thus far, but the weather of October will prove critical, for good or bad development. A preliminary estimate of the beet crop of all Europe ranges from 6,350,000 to 6,785,000 tons, an average of 6,567,500 tons, against an outturn last year of 6,532,000 tons. Cuba crop reports continue favorable, with one central still working and the Six Ports stock reduced to 34,000 tons."

A peculiar feature of the market for several days during the week was the fact that there was no Wallaceburg beet sugar to be had. Supplies of raw sugar coming in from the factory were held up for some days in the St. Lawrence and in the meantime the factory was forced to suspend operations. The arrival of the supplies, however, has remedied matters. Prices at time of writing were as follows:

TEA—There is a fair amount of business passing with no particularly new features. Cables received during the week by local brokers report a firm market all round for Ceylons.

Keary & Tonge's September report, just to hand, says regarding the situation in Ceylon:—"The month of August has been decidedly interesting for the tea trade, and Ceylon has not been behind hand in what might be termed surprises. On the Colombo market very near a panic has occurred, buyers tumbling over one another to secure teas with quality, and paying any price for them. For teas above common, prices have been rushed up to an extent which has not been equalled on this market for many years. Improvement in quality cannot altogether account for this excitement, as although there has been improvement it has not been in excess of that which is usual at this period of the year. About the middle of the month the estimate for shipments to the United Kingdom had to be revised, and reduced from 8,500,000 lbs. to 6,500,000 lbs. owing to cold winds and drought; and with this came news from India that the crop there was below the average in quality. The probability is that this has been over-rated and consequently the high level in prices which fine tea has reached is extremely dangerous. Common tea continues to be neglected and the market for this grade is again lower, the statistical position is fairly strong—prices therefore for this grade are as low as they are likely to be. Medium tea has been in very strong demand, and prices have advanced rapidly during the month; in many cases there has been rises of 1½d. to 2d. per lb. Fine tea.—There has been a large supply of this grade, and with a very strong demand prices have gone up to a most unusual extent."

COFFEE — Business continues very fair with a slight stimulation in some quarters as colder weather sets in. Prices are unchanged.

DRIED FRUITS—California prunes, apricots and seeded raisins are passing off fairly well. There seems to be less demand than expected for the new Mediterranean fruits and some houses are cutting prices on raisins, quoting as low as 5½. Just how good business this is remains to be seen. The regular market price is 7½. Valencias have been sagging a little in Denia during the week, going down as much as 2 shillings. A recovery has been made, however, to former prices, and the change has had no influence on local quotations.

GAVE WRONG STREET ADDRESS.

An item in these columns last week, headed "New Sauce Manufacturers in Toronto," and referring to the Mason-Miller Co., who have just begun business in the city, inadvertently went astray in giving the street address of the new firm. The Mason-Miller Co. is at 27 Melinda Street, instead of on Wellington Street West, as was stated. Their No. 1 sauce and essence of beef, the latter in glass jars, though only a few weeks on the market, is being very favorably received.

SUGAR MARKETS DECLINING.

With the falling off in demand for sugar since the close of the preserving season, the markets have assumed a somewhat easier tone. This was evidenced by a decline of 10 cents in New York markets on Wednesday morning, and this was followed on Wednesday afternoon by the St. Lawrence Sugar Co., Montreal, who notified the trade of a decline of 10 cents. At the time of writing the other companies had not followed, but will probably do so in a day or so. Considering the present situation retailers will do well to curtail their buying as far as possible for some time at least.

TRADE NOTES.

J. S. Donaldson, the Toronto broker, who was injured on the street a couple of weeks ago, was able to return to his office on Saturday and is again on the street. His many friends in the trade are very glad to see him about again.

Hamilton Morton & Co., 1 Wellington St. E., Toronto, have been appointed agents for the city and district for Balmoral pure jams, preserves and marmalades, manufactured by J. W. Windsor, Montreal.

Millman & Sons, Toronto, received a quantity of new crop Western Ontario beans last week, and distributed them to the trade. The market has been pretty well cleaned up for some time and the new crop beans will relieve this somewhat.

MANITOBA MARKETS

(Market quotations corrected by telegraph up to 9 a.m. Thursday, October 8, 1908.)

Increased activity is apparent in all branches of the grocery trade. The year's business is likely to show a small increase over that of 1907, with several of the wholesale houses. Money is more plentiful and collections are showing a marked improvement.

A REAL EYE FOR BUSINESS.

Fred. Lowe, manager of J. H. Wethey & Co., St. Catharines, told The Grocer the other day of an amusing experience he had in Buffalo recently. He was over buying some barrels for pulping and reserve stock purposes, and ran up against a dealer in these. The barrel man was a lineal descendant of Abraham of Biblical fame, and, as was to be expected, a keen business man. After examining the barrels, Mr. Lowe decided they would do, and a price for the same was agreed upon. Then the question of cartage came up and Abraham's son agreed to deliver them at the station for 2½c each. His business caution, however, induced him to say: "Vait a few minutes, Mr. Lowe, und I vill see the cartage man and I'll be right pack."

Off he went about four or five blocks down the street. On his return he said: "Say, Mr. Lowe, dot carter won't do de job for less dan 5c a barrel."

This was not satisfactory, so Mr. Lowe said: "Now, look here, you agreed to deliver the barrels for 2½c a piece and as a bargain is a bargain, unless you can do them at that price we'll call the deal off and I'll get my barrels elsewhere."

This didn't suit Abraham a little bit, so he said: "You vait a meenute. I'll dell you vot we'll do. We'll run down und see de carter und maybe we can pring him down a bit. It's only a few blocks down. Let us valk dere."

As Mr. Lowe was pressed for time he suggested using the street car, but none being available in that direction they walked the five blocks. On arriving at the carter's place the Jew turned to Mr. Lowe with a very smuck and knowing smile, and said: "You see, Mr. Lowe, you hap saved the cartage on two barrels already."

"Talk about an eye to business, but it was funny," said Mr. Lowe, and it was.

Quebec and the Maritime Provinces

Montreal Grocers Complain of Fruit Jars—Large Shipments of Potatoes to Cuba From the Maritime Provinces—Fish Markets Dull in Nova Scotia.

MONTREAL.

October 7.—W. Willison, of Willison Bros., corner of Prince Arthur and Elgin Streets, has returned from a short fishing trip to St. Margaret.

John Davidson, of Fraser, Viger & Co., has returned from an extended tour of the Lower Provinces and Newfoundland. Mr. Davidson talks interestingly of conditions in this part of Canada. He stated that times were bad in Newfoundland owing to the low price of fish, upon which the inhabitants largely depend for their maintenance. This condition is due to a somewhat extraordinary and interesting cause. Most of Newfoundland's output of fish finds its market in Spain, France and Italy. Some years ago when a shortage occurred in the supply, and prices consequently went high, the people ate pork as a substitute, and became so fond of it that they have never completely restored their allegiance to fish. In this way the supply required in these European countries, is much less than formerly. Mr. Davidson states that the people of the Ancient Colony are in the throes of a political struggle, and the price of fish seems to be one of the main issues, both parties promising an improvement. Although Newfoundland lies close to Canada, the habits, manners and customs of her people and her trade and affiliations place her in a position closer to England than Canada in everything except geographical situation. After visiting Charlottetown, P.E.I., Sydney, C.B., St. John and other points, Mr. Davidson reports business in the Maritimes fairly good.

Montreal grocers are experiencing their share of loss, and inconvenience with fruit jars. Owing to inadequate packing these goods are frequently broken, so that the profits are considerably diminished. From all accounts it looks as though the manufacturers are not alive to their own interests in this respect as already jars of foreign makes have made their appearance on the market.

J. D. Phillips, corner of Prince Arthur and Elgin St., has made an assignment.

John Robertson, St. Catharine St. W., has a striking window display this week. The base consists of a pretty design of wall paper, arranged so that it slopes toward the front of window at an angle of 45 degrees. Pyramids of imported French peas are built up from the floor of the window and about halfway to the top of these pyramids, which are from three to four feet high, they make their way through the paper. The holes in the paper are cut to exactly permit the pyramids to fill the holes. The appearance from the other side of the street is particularly striking. The pyramids seem to be cut off diagonally at the base, the same as a house appears built on a side hill.

J. S. Walker, late with A. T. Wiley & Co., has joined the staff of McClure & Langley, Montreal, as salesman.

Jos. White, Toronto, is taking charge of the advertising campaign being carried on by Chiclets in Montreal.

Walter Johnston, of Sao Paulo, Brazil, who has been a visitor in Montreal recently discussed in an interesting way the other day Brazil's valorization of coffee. From his words it seems that the country is having difficulty in carrying out its scheme, and the burden is becoming a heavy one. At the present time Brazil holds about sixty-five per cent. of the visible coffee supply of the world. It was assumed by the originators of the scheme that in this way prices would become pliable in their hands and could be molded to suit their aims. However it may be said for them, much to their credit, that their only ambition was to maintain a good healthy price, and in no way to force the price above this limit. Up to the present time the market has not yielded to their manipulation, and continued loans have to be made in order to absorb the supply and place it in storage. Mr. Johnston expresses the opinion that Brazil will always find it a burden to affect artificial ends in this way, and, at anv rate, the present experiment is becoming tiresome.

W. G. Cochrane, Eastern division sales agent of the Quaker Oats Company, Peterborough, was in Montreal for a few days this week.

RICHMOND.

October 6.—Potatoes are firm in price. selling readily at $1 per bushel. One of our grocers, however, is advertising a carload, to arrive from the Lower Provinces, at 65c.

Creamery butter is selling at 28c, and dairy at 26c per pound. Eggs are bringing from 22c to 25c per dozen.

Kenneth McCrae and G. J. Jamieson, two of our energetic grocers, recently returned from the Toronto Fair, and they report a very enjoyable trip. These gentlemen stated that they thought every grocer who could possibly get an opportunity should attend this Fair, as it was highly instructive.

The first carload of grapes which has ever been brought into Richmond was received by P. J. Girard last week from St. Catharines, Ont., from which place he obtains nearly all his Canadian fruits.

The arrival in town of one hundred Italians, who are employed laying steel, made it necessary for the grocers to resort to all sorts of methods to discover their wants and requirements. They swarmed the stores nightly, and as they were limited to their own language many dealers were forced to adopt the deaf and dumb system of communication.

Business is not any too brisk at the present time. Everyone is busy thinking and talking about the approaching elections.

ST. JOHN.

October 6.—Business continues very satisfactory. There have been practically no changes in the prices of staples. In the produce line, meats are somewhat lower owing to the opening of the game season. Beef and mutton have declined one cent a pound. Carrots, beets and turnips are cheaper. Tub butter has advanced and is now quoted at from 22 to 24 cents a pound. Dry codfish are now coming in quite freely. The latest quotations are large, $3.75 to $4; medium, the same; small, $2.75 to $3; Pollock, $1.50 to $1.75. These prices show a marked decline in values.

The outlook is good for some heavy shipments from St. John to Cuba during the next few months. At the present time St. John is receiving a visit from Bartole Ruiz, of Havana, Cuba, accompanied by Mr. Berutich, an interpreter. They represent Yaguierdo & Co., of Havana, one of the largest dealers in potatoes on the island. The visit here is to endeavor to arrange for large quantities of potatoes to be shipped to Cuba during the next three months. Mr. Ruiz is arranging with A. C. Smith & Co., of the west side, and F. E. Williams & Co., for shipments, and it is altogether likely that a new market will be opened up to the potatoe growers of New Brunswick, and one that will prove fully as profitable as the Ontario market. The next steamer to sail from St. John for Havana will take away about 6,000 barrels of potatoes.

Tenders for supplies for the Municipal Home have been awarded as follows: M. & H. Gallagher & Co., groceries; G. A. Reicker, drugs; G. F. Smith, bread; O'Neill Bros., meats.

Alderman J. W. Vanwart, the Charlotte Street grocer, was away last week on a moose hunt.

HALIFAX.

October 6.—The feature of the grocery markets last week was a sharp advance in the price of pork, which took a jump of two dollars per barrel. In sympathy with pork, lard has also gone up, and a further advance is looked for. The price of beef is somewhat easier at present. On October 1st canned peas were advanced two and one-half cents per dozen.

Australian sugar has been advanced twenty cents per bag. Some weeks ago there was a reduction in this article, but it is now again on the upward trend.

Eggs are a little easier this week The receipts have increased somewhat, and the quality of the stock is much improved. There is only a fair demand for eggs at present.

Now that the pickling season is on there is a good demand for such lines as vinegars, spices, mustard, onions, green tomatoes and cauliflowers, all of which are used in making chow-chow. As the home-made article is very appetizing it is in great favor here and large quantities are made to tide over the long winter months.

Very little winter butter has come on the market so far, but the indications are that there will be a fairly good supply later on. One favorable sign is that there is a good demand from several districts for empty tubs, and it is taken for granted that there must be butter in sight to fill them.

Some fine cranberries are now on the market, quoted at six dollars per barrel.

The Elder-Dempster line steamer Bornu, loaded 14,000 barrels of potatoes here last week and sailed on Saturday for Havana and Mexico.

The shipments of apples from Halifax to the English market continue very heavy for so early in the season. The Furness line steamer Tobasco, which sailed this week for London, took away 23,300 barrels.

Conditions in the fish trade are not particularly satisfactory to the dealers at present. There is a general depression in all the consuming markets and the effect of this is being felt in Nova Scotia as much as anywhere else. Prices are much lower this year than was the case last year, and, according to many dealers, there is not very much prospect of any improvement before next year. "The market at present is dull, stale and unprofitable," was the way in which one dealer put it recently, and he added that as far as he could see there was not very much chance of any great improvement for some months. Many causes are assigned for this condition of affairs. The decline in prices seems to be pretty nearly world-wide. Prices have been comparatively high for some years now, and, in some quarters, the decline is regarded as only the natural sequence of the former good prices. There was a considerable stock of fish carried over from last year, and at the beginning of the season it all went into the markets, particularly in the West Indies, and this has had some effect in reducing the prices. At any event, the drop in prices has been considerable. About this time last season the Lunenburg Bank catch was bringing about $5.50 per quintal. In June, at the beginning of this season, it sold at $5. Then the price began to drop. It went to $4.75, then to $4.50, and steadily declined until now it is only bringing $3.10 per quintal, and some dealers fear that it will go even lower.

CHATHAM.

October 6.—In common with the rest of Ontario, Chatham has just experienced a sharp rise in butter and egg prices. Last Saturday for dairy butter 28c a pound was the prevailing price on the local market, while creamery ranges as usual several cents higher. Eggs sold for 22c.

The apple crop throughout the country on the whole is pretty good, though it is a question if Winter apples will be as good a crop as were the earlier varieties. From all account, the Northern Spy crop will be short. Other fruit is plentiful.

E. R. Snook's grocery now presents an imposing "red front," thanks to a recent generous coat of paint.

At Ridgetown last week the East Kent Liberals renominated D. A. Gordon, M.P., President of the Wallaceburg Sugar Company, for the Commons. To Mr. Gordon is largely due the introduction of sugar beets, now a staple crop, into Western Ontario; while in his home town, Wallaceburg, he is a sort of uncrowned king.

The grocery stock and fixtures of Geo. Harrison, who up to a short time ago conducted a grocery at Wilkesport, were recently offered for sale. There was nothing doing, however, none of the tenders received being sufficient to cover the reserve bid.

According to reports which have reached here Leamington will likely capture the Canadian branch of the Heinz Pickling Company, which it was at one time thought would locate here. Mr. Heinz, accompanied by his solicitor, visited the Leamington Fair last week, and is reported to have been very much struck with the abundance and excellent quality of the fruits and vegetables exhibited. A conference was held with the town industrial committee, and it is understood that if Leamington will provide the company with the Ward tobacco factory as a site, the branch will be located there. A civic delegation will visit the Holland, Mich., branch at the company's expense.

E. W. Wills has opened a new grocery in Dresden, and is making a special feature of Saturday "bargain windows."

The Chatham Board of Trade on Tuesday evening last held the first meeting which has taken place since the commencement of the hot weather. The gathering was well attended. The big general meetings of the Board of Trade, addressed by outside speakers on important subjects, which were a feature of last year's work, will be continued this year.

That Chatham is now in direct connection with the Michigan Central is evidenced by the fact that through the recently-completed C.W. & L.E. electric line the M.C.R. will shortly open an office in the C.W. & L.E. building. They will, it is understood, make a strong bid for both passenger and freight trade.

The work of city numbering was commenced last week on King Street, and is making rapid progress. It will be some months, however, before the entire city is numbered, owing to the fact that plans have to be drawn as the work progresses.

LONDON.

October 6.—Wholesale trade is fair; prices are unchanged, and collections are good. To induce orders, producers are offering currants and Valencia raisins at reduced prices and the goods are beginning to move slowly.

Retail trade shows a slight lessening of activity. The preserving season having passed, and the heavy frost of last week destroying what cucumbers and tomatoes were left in gardens having put a sudden end to pickling operations, demand for sugar, spices and vinegar has naturally dropped to normal.

A local wholesaler is offering the trade new canned tomatoes at 85 cents per dozen, which is 10 cents less than the combine prices and would enable the retailer to sell at three for a quarter.

W. H. Bloomfield, grocer, has removed from the corner of King and Ridout Streets to the corner of Richmond and Kent.

At the next regular meeting of the Retail Grocers' Association it is likely the question of holding the annual banquet will be taken up. The success of last year's function was such that members feel it would be a mistake not to continue the banquet as an annual affair.

A number of grocers intend taking in the Delaware Fair on Wednesday of this week. A year ago a party of them went out and spent such an enjoyable day that they feel it would never do not to repeat the visit.

PETERBORO.

October 6.—Raymond Perry, employed with W. Bradshaw, grocer, was brutally assaulted on Thursday night a few rods from his own home and robbed of his watch and chain. He usually locks the till and closes Mr. Bradshaw's store, and it is thought the highwayman suspected he would have some money in his pocket. Perry was badly injured and is yet confined to his bed, but will recover.

The assessors' returns, which have been handed in to the City Clerk, show that the city's population has increased 491 during the last year. It is now 16,491.

Samuel Long, East City, has purchased the bakery and confectionery business from Wm. Wheeler. The change in ownership was made on September 28th.

The general store owned and managed by John Duff, Indian River, for many years, has changed hands. The new proprietor is Walter Kidd, a young man who lived in Dummer Township, near Warsaw. Mr. Duff also owned the grain elevator at Indian River, which has been purchased by F. A. Kidd, a brother of Walter Kidd. Mr. Duff and family have come to Peterboro to reside.

Apples in this vicinity are now as scarce as was predicted some time ago. Buyers of the city who have been out through the country state that there is a heavy crop of fall apples. The winter varieties are, however, somewhat scarcer, but the St. Lawrence, Wealthy Bell Flower, Garden Lily, Tallman Sweet, etc., are plentiful.

GUELPH.

October 6.—Hats off to Harry Sibbley, driver for Chas. T. Hicks, for again showing the rest a clean pair of heels at Fergus show in the delivery rig class. McHardy's outfit got second and O'Mara's third. McHardy rang in another horse, and O'Mara brought one of his fine roadsters from Palmerston and put on his Guelph rig, but still old Harry cleaned up first money. The interest this year in this class has been very keen and bids fair to bring out a better class of horses and rigs in future. The prizes are small, however, and should be extended. A driver showing his horse and rig should also be allowed the prize money to keep up his interest, and also to pay him for his extra time in fixing up the outfit for show purposes. The best of feeling prevailed, and each one of the defeated outfits congratulated the winner and now I suppose we will all settle down for another year on the delivery rig question.

Business was quiet last week and again on Saturday, owing to the absence of the farmers. Prices again went a notch higher, and the creameries were again called into requisition to supply the scarcity of butter.

The Post Office Department has promised a free rural mail delivery in South Wellington along the stage lines, and to be extended as soon as practicable. This will mean more business for the merchants in Guelph.

The President of the Retail Merchants' Association has promised to attend to the observance of the Lord's Day Act, complained of in last week's issue.

Ald. Geo. Thorpe, one of the largest shippers of turnips in this district, is quite disappointed at the outlook in this section this year, and apparently Market Clerk Doughty is also, as he has applied to the Council for a rebate on account of the turnip business being to such an extent a failure.

The Guelph correspondent has to plead guilty to one offence. He was buying a few candies for his best girl and offered the young lady a 25c piece in payment, which she pronounced bad. That was bad enough, but two of our wise old grocers happened to be in the store and saw the transaction and wanted to know if that would go in The Grocer. I wonder if I got that 25c piece from either of those gentlemen the big broad smile indicated perhaps?

The second crop of clover in this section is simply fine to look at, and there is no reason for scarcity of pasture as an excuse for the high price of butter, except that it may lack nutrition.

R. A. Pratt, of Red Rose Tea, was in the city again this week giving the boys all a nice lead pencil with the usual inscription on it, "Red Rose Tea is Good Tea, Sell an Extra Pound To-day." These little tokens are appreciated by the boys and girls behind the counters.

It is a comical thing to get some orders these days that you never get. I saw a grocer get an order the other day from a stranger to him, I could see, and after thinking he had landed a new customer he got a surprise when the stranger to him, but not to all of us, said: "I am to make a personal canvass of this district for Mr. So-and-So, and I suppose you can give him a lift this time." Does a grocery order change votes at election time? It helps business.

New cranberries, raisins and peels in the grocery advertising this week makes a fellow feel good. The best time of the year is coming, shorter hours, better sales, longer nights, time to read, time to think.

ST. THOMAS.

October 6.—Saturday's market, especially the East End, or Horton Market, was very largely attended by both buyers and sellers notwithstanding the imposition of fees, and the prediction that the farmers would boycott the market on that account was all wrong. Butter and eggs were up, the former selling for from 28c to 30c, and the latter 25c per dozen. There were vegetables galore, and the sales were large. Potatoes, however, owing to the dry weather, were not so plentiful, and the prices ranged from 80c to $1 per bushel.

Lard is away up, and the grocers now pay 14¾c per lb. for the best grades, and some are still retailing it at 16c lb., which does not pay to handle at present cost at that figure.

The Burgess prosecution by Inspector Shaw at the request of the defence, was again postponed to-day, and comes up for a hearing before Police Magistrate Glenn next Monday; in the meantime the peddling continues. It seems strange that the City Solicitor does not aid Mr. Shaw in these prosecutions as the revenue and licenses derived from peddler is reaped by the city and the defendants in every instance have legal help, and quite necessarily, as the transient traders and peddlers by-laws have been so frequently amended that the result is very confusing to the lay mind.

Our grocers generally report that business for August and September months were both ahead of last year, which is most gratifying.

Joseph J. McAdam, one of St. Thomas' pioneer grocers, is paying a short visit in the city, and was much pleased at the many improvements made during the three years since his last visit here. He is now located at Prescott.

BARRIE.

October 6.—W. P. Soules, an old Sixth Ward merchant, has decided again to go into the grocery business after a retirement of four or five years, and is fitting up his store on the corner of Dunlop and Mulcaster Streets, lately vacated by Thos. Calwell.

The contents and stock of Sam Calwell's grocery were all disposed of this week and the building will now be turned into a bowling alley.

Last week would have been a bumper week for the merchants had we had fine weather, our Exhibition being held the first half of the week. As it was, there was a record crowd on Tuesday, the main day, and a big business was done, principally in the fruit line.

Local merchants are not buying very heavily in canned tomatoes this year in comparison with other years, owing to the large crop this year and the low prices. Fruit jars are all cleaned up, some of which have been laying in storehouses for a couple of years.

Butter jumped in price on our local market Saturday, when as high as 27 cents was paid, while the general price was 25 and 26 cents. Eggs also had the same tendency, selling at 22 to 25 cents.

Trade is picking up in groceries the past week or so, now that the fruit season is over, and people are beginning to buy dried fruits, canned goods, etc. The first new raisins and figs arrived in town last Wednesday, and new peels and currants are arriving this week, and the grocery fall trade will now be in full swing. "Thank goodness," remarked a merchant the other day, "that the fruit business is over. I can now make a little money selling groceries to even up with my losses of the fruit I have been selling during the summer."

James Vair is in Winnipeg and the Northwest Territories with several carloads of apples. He reports sales very good, but apples rotting very quickly, owing to the previous hot, dry weather. R. A. Thomas is up in New Ontario also with several cars of apples, and reports an active demand in that country for apples, owing to the fact that no apples are grown in that section.

On Saturday evening a pleasing event took place at the home of A. C. Garden, when a great number of the Commercial Travelers' Association, of Barrie, assembled to show their appreciation of one of their brethren, R. M. Butler, on the eve of his departure for Toronto, after thirty years' residence here. On behalf of the travelers, Mr. Garden presented Mr. Butler with six handsome pieces of cut glass and a gold-headed cane, while Wm. A. Griffith read the address. A good time and speeches were indulged in, and the merry gathering broke up early in the morning singing, "He's a Jolly Good Fellow."

BRANTFORD.

October 6.—The annual meeting of the Brantford Grocers' and Butchers' Association was held last Tuesday evening, September 29, in the new hall in the Bank of Hamilton building. In the absence of the president, Fred. C. Harp occupied the chair. The reports showed that everything is in a prosperous condition and that the membership was steadily increasing. The election of officers was deferred for one month on account of the absence of the president. After the business of the evening was disposed of those present adjourned to a restaurant, where a tasty luncheon was served. The speeches were numerous and interesting. Regret was expressed that Ed. Church and Clarke Moore were retiring from the association, having recently disposed of their business on Dalhousie Street to Geo. J. Harp.

GALT.

October 6.—Trade in Galt is exceptionally brisk at present. Many of the factories which have been running on short time have resumed the 10-hour day, and a couple which have been entirely closed down have opened up again and consequently public confidence has been restored to a certain extent. Those housewives who were most frugal when the working hours were shortened now see their way clear to spend a certain amount on what might be termed "necessary luxuries" and most of these emanate from the grocery store, and the grocer reaps the benefit.

T. G. Robinson, who recently opened a grocery store in the north end of the town is doing remarkably well. A neat little store, a fine stock of goods and courteous treatment will do the same for most any grocer.

The large grocery of John Sloan was closed for two days this week owing to the death at Guelph of Robert Sloan, who had reached the ripe old age of 90 years. Deceased was the father of the proprietors of the grocery.

Deans & Walker had two nicely decorated windows last week. The display was arranged for the benefit of the many ladies who come down town to attend the millinery openings in the evening. The firm recognized the opportunity of placing themselves before the ladies, and for two days before the openings advertised that on that evening the "Red Front" would have something special in a window display. The head-line of the advertisement conveyed the statement in big type that "The windows of a store are an index to its interior." One window was devoted to fruits, while pickling requisites were displayed in the other.

The Galt Retail Merchants' Association presented a valuable cup for a competition among the various townships represented at the Galt Fall Fair this year.

OTTAWA.

October 6.—Nowhere was the prevailing cold snap, which has characterized the weatherman's offerings these last few days been more noticeable than on the Ottawa market. Long drives through the chill morning air had made the hucksters as blue of face as the chickens some of them were selling, while the faces of others were enriched by noses which, red before, had now assumed a lovely royal purple. Those who were selling meat, however, consoled themselves with the reflection that it's an ill wind that blows no one good, for these cold days are just the brand of weather to encourage the buying of meat in quantities. Notwithstanding the general frigidity there is a good showing of vegetables and prices in most cases had undergone no alterations. Celery was again plentiful at the same figure as on last market day. Butter was again a little stiffer at 28c a pail. The hens are not so active as they were some time ago, and, as a result, the supply of eggs on By Ward Market is smaller, and the prices asked for them are higher. Nice fresh ones, ones that no hen would be ashamed to mother—commanded 30c this morning, while for others not so fresh 28c was asked.

Milk is now so scarce in the city that one of the largest firms selling is refusing to supply corner groceries with any. This, of course, affects the customers to whom they sell. The company on Thursday began charging 8 cents a quart for milk, and it is expected it will be 9 cents. The company has had to refuse to supply milk to some new customers applying. This condition of affairs is by no means confined to Ottawa. The meadows have been poor for weeks, there is no straw, and the hay crop is perhaps not even up to the average. There is a better crop of corn and field roots than usual and this is about the only "silver lining in the cloud" to farmers at present. All this affects the city, and already milk is being brought into Ottawa by rail. It is stated that the scarcity of feed will very materially affect the price of butter this winter.

Apple shippers are warned that pink rot appears to be very prevalent this year, and hence the shipping of apples not perfectly free from apple scab and showing signs of pink rot, is particularly hazardous.

PERTH.

October 6.—At present Perth has a coal oil war. A coal oil peddlar struck town and sold for several days before he paid a fine and bought a license. Local dealers have dropped their prices to: American oil, 15c gal.; Canadian, 13c. At present buyers are filling every available can with oil, wondering how long present prices will hold and whether or not the peddler can stand the opposition.

During the season just past N. E. Dodds, the Gore Street grocer, has had his store remodeled. The whole old front was torn out and a new plate glass front put in. He has improved his lighting and added a silent salesman. His store is now one of the brightest in town and should draw increased trade.

Where is Perth's Retail Merchants' Association? We have not heard of it for some time.

Apples are a poor crop in this section so probably more western apples than usual will be needed.

Notes from British Columbia

Making Arrangements to Bring in California Fruit — Local Manufacturers Reduce Biscuit Prices.

VANCOUVER.

October 5.—John Hendry returned this week from Montreal where he was in attendance at the annual meeting of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. He was tendered the nomination of president, but did not care to undertake the responsibility of traveling East three or four times a year. Apart from the main matters of importance transacted at the meeting, Mr. Hendry remarked that hitherto there has been an unintentional sectionalism between the East and the West, but this has happily been removed and a unification of the manufacturing interests in Canada has been brought about.

Another reduction has been made in the price of Ramsay's sodas, which are manufactured in this city. For some time the price has been 21¼c, but this has now been brought down to 21c.

Butter men are already getting into communication with houses in California to arrange for shipments north when the scarcity sets in here. No further advices have arrived as to conditions in Australia, but it is expected that the usual consignments will come from that country. New Zealand has good butter for export, but the benefit will not be felt here, as there are no cold storage facilities on the boats plying between there and British Columbia.

The Southern Okanagan Canning Company, Penticton, has installed a new cooker, and is turning out on an average about 900 cans per day. An effort will be made to interest sufficient capital to have the plant increased so that from five to ten thousand cans will be turned out next season. This year's operations were something in the way of an experiment, but were successful. The demand has been double the output.

CHEESE AND BUTTER BULLETIN

Montreal, October 7, 1908.

For the coming few months the butter market will offer a good field for those who are given to speculation. At the present time it is extremely difficult to forecast the outcome. The prevailing high price of butter has put it out of the running so far as export is considered. This means that all which is not being used for local consumption is going into storage. If it had not been for the extremely dry weather which has been experienced, some calculations as to the future could have been formed, but as it is this is impossible.

There seems to be, however, a widespread opinion that prices will be high, and it is interesting to note, the reasons why this conjecture might prove a fallacy. As it is at the present time, much butter, although the receipts are not heavy, is going into storage. This is being done on the presumption that the export business will be restored to a healthy status soon, when all this surplus butter would find a profitable outlet. This is an optimistic way of looking at the market, but there are many things which could preclude such a happy ending for the shippers and then they would find themselves with large supplies on their hands and then would be forced to sacrifice in order to save themselves.

Weather prophets prophesy a long, open fall, and if this comes true the yield may approach close to last year's record in the total and in this contingency there will be plenty of butter to take care of. It must be remembered that the English market cannot be depended on at this time of the year to maintain prices as some of the countries from which she draws her butter supply are just now starting their season. It will be seen from this that the dangers of the butter market are manifold at the present time.

Some English and Northwestern firms are holding butter here in the hope that the same opportunities will offer themselves for making good profits, as did last year. Australian butter will soon be a factor in the English markets, and there does not seem to be any definite information with regard to the prospects of the output. Owing to the smoky weather, navigation has been interfered with to some extent, therefore returns regarding shipment cannot be relied upon as an accurate reflection of the true conditions. Total receipts this season since May 1, 342,091 packages, as against 336,885 packages for the corresponding period of last year.

From these figures it will be seen the production is ahead of last year's record by 5,206 packages, notwithstanding the natural disadvantages of the season, owing to dry weather, as well as the fact that the number of cows participating in this result, is much smaller than last year. Locally, the market is firm, with finest creamery quoted at 25¼c in round lots, and 26 to 26½c in a jobbing way. Total shipments upto date from May 1, 85,035 packages, as against 65,788 packages for the same period of last year.

The cheese market is easier, owing to receipts being larger than was anticipated, and the fact also, that the export demand has fallen off largely on account of the high level of prices. It is thought however that prices will not change very materially as the factorymen are sold up close, owing to the fancy prices which they have been getting lately. Dealers are looking to a good local demand to exhaust their stocks, as the possibility of a heavy English demand is not good. This condition is due to the fact that many are out of employment there, and consequently there will not be so much money in circulation. Another factor which will militate against the Canadian product is the fact that reports arriving from New Zealand state the prospects are good for an enormous yield during their coming season. Up to nearly the present time the drought has not shown much effect on the cheese receipts, but for the last day or so there has been a scarcely perceptible falling off. The cheese which was made before the dry period has been the cheese which has been arriving, so in reality the effect on receipts could not be expected until the yield during that time got into motion.

Receipts of cheese since May 1 are 1,548,528 boxes, against 1,696,751 boxes for the same period of last year. Total exports since May 1 up to the present are 1,386,849 boxes, against 1,595,775 boxes for the corresponding period of last year. Locally the cheese market is firm with Westerns quoted at 12½c to 12⅝c, and Easterns at 12⅛c to 12⅜c.

Toronto, October 8, 1908.

Conditions in the Canadian packing industry have not changed materially since reports of a week ago. Beyond the fact of a freer delivery of a better class of hogs the situation remains about the same. At the present time the supplies of hogs, which have been held back for the past four or five weeks when the packers wanted them badly and when a good price prevailed, seem to be coming forward. Either they have just been gotten into condition or the farmers are beginning to realize that they cannot hope for better prices this Fall.

This week, too, as happens over again to the misfortune of the packer when a supply of hogs is available, the British market falls off and chances for good export business are rather curtailed. Last week the British market dropped off several points owing, it was reported, to large supplies of Danish. This week it has sagged again, seemingly as a result of poor demand, an extensive strike of cotton operators in Lancashire and the consequent curtailment of purchases on their part being credited with part of the drop in consumption. The Danes, too, shipped in pretty heavy supplies last week and with a steady supply of Irish the market is pretty well supplied.

As a result of these conditions not much Canadian bacon is going forward. Business at home continues fairly good, though not so brisk as during the Summer.

With the demand lessened, as noted, and a fairly free delivery of hogs, it is only natural that the price offered has fallen off a little. $6.25 f.o.b. is being paid in the larger centres this week, but at other points the offering is from 10 to 15 cents below this. One improvement noticeable, and a very welcome one, is that the quality of hogs coming in is improving very noticeably. The animals are not so light as they have been running for some time past and they are consequently a good deal more acceptable to the packer.

Short stocks in the United States markets have awakened considerably more interest during the week, as is evident in the following review from the New York Journal of Commerce:—"There has been more interest and strength in these markets the past week, especially the latter half, owing to the big decrease in stocks at Chicago for September, which was much larger than expected, especially of lard, of which the world's stock shows a similar decrease owing to the continued prevalence of grass-fed hogs in the market, yielding very little lard. Other products also showed larger reduction than expected, and some have the suspicion that they have been made to appear smaller than they really are by the packers, as they own them and are anxious to work them off before the new crop of hogs comes on the market. There was, however, a long interest by professionals and the small packers in October stuffs, and the big packers broke prices and made heavy deliveries on the first when they bought the product thus shaken out at the same time they were bulling January and induced buying for "investment" because of their discount, although they supplied this demand at the advance. This is about all there has been to these markets during the past week, as cash demand at the East is not improving, and nobody has confidence enough in present prices to anticipate their wants, though January stuff looks somewhat cheap compared with the nearby deliveries. Consumption at the South and at the far West, however, has been good, and that has been the chief reason for the real reduction in stock, aside from the small production of lard."

PROVISION MARKETS

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS—The provision market has been firm during the week, and prices have been fully maintained. Stocks are light and receipts of hogs are also light. Consequently, this has led to considerable strength of the market. Prices remain unchanged with a strong undertone.

CHEESE—Prices in the country are, if anything, a shade easier owing to falling off in export demand, which is not at all keen. Purchases at present will to a great extent have to be stored for future deliveries. The lateness of the season is responsible for decrease in the make.

PROVISIONS—Very brisk demand is made for general lines of provisions, especially from outside points. From the West and along the north shore of the Upper Lakes have come splendid orders during the week. Many dealers are getting in their winter supply now before the close of navigation, so as to avail themselves of the low freight rates. Prices generally remain at last week's quotations, though light and large hams are slightly firmer and short cuts have advanced 50 cents a barrel. Lard was expected to decline, but the hogs offering at present are short in the matter of lard, and supplies, while large enough for the demands now existing, are none too plenty to warrant a cut in price.

Hogs are commanding a higher price just now than is usual at this season of the year, and the packers are getting plenty for killing. It is likely the price will come down, however, but what effect this will have on the finished product is yet too early to say, as there are many varying circumstances to consider.

BUTTER — Firming up steadily, though slowly, are all grades of butter. While continuing to quote creamery at 25½c, there is very little to be had at that price, and 27c is the more likely figure, as many houses now quote that price as the flat rate. Business is good and supplies are fair—though not so free as a fortnight ago.

EGGS—Another advance is noted in the egg market. One house is still quoting 21c, though the general price is 22c, and a number of the smaller houses quote 23c. This latter will likely be the price next week, for the demand is very great and supplies have dropped off and are not at all so free as during September. The shrinkage, while lessening, is still pretty high, and cuts into the profit from sales.

CHEESE—At last there seems some life in the cheese situation. The northern parts of the Province are taking quite a little, the orders being fairly large. Prices are firming up. One of the largest Toronto houses still has some old cheese, but it is going out and soon will be out of the market.

POULTRY—Large supplies of poultry have been received during the week. Turkeys, young ones, are hard to get, but there are plenty of other birds to be had. Demand is growing and prices remain at the old quotations. Live weight continues to be quoted, though dressed birds are more frequently asked for. A number of wild ducks, shot by sportsmen in the north country, are being offered on the market this week.

THE FLOUR AND CEREAL MARKETS

All Lines Are Firm With Good Business—Large Exports of Flour and Oatmeal —Rolled Wheat Will Likely Advance.

Excellent business in nearly all lines and strong export demand is keeping the flour and cereal markets very firm this week.

Millers, particularly in Ontario, are busy, busier than they have been for years, according to reports from some quarters, this being accounted for by the excellent demand from abroad, and also by the large sales being made at home. While the markets are strong, no advance has as yet taken place, but a change before long is not improbable.

The large exports of oatmeal are making this commodity scarce in Canada and this market is also firm. Rolled wheat seems to be on the tapis for an advance shortly.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR—Foreign inquiry increased slightly and this coupled with a still improving condition of the demand in the country constitutes the new features of this market for this week. Stocks are small but dealers are not yet showing any disposition to order in large quantities, preferring small lots and frequent shipment, which they regard as the safer alternative.

FEED—Supplies of bran arriving are somewhat larger, which is due to the fact that some of the smaller mills are now contributing their share to the market. The price, however, remains firm. In a short time it is expected supplies will be ample to meet the demand. Shorts and middlings are fairly active. Prices have been maintained during the week at last week's figures.

FLOUR—The market continues very strong and business is exceedingly good. "Not for several years have we seen such demand, both at home and abroad," said a local miller this week. "We could keep three mills busy just now if we had them." Prices are steady, but with the firm condition of the markets an advance is not improbable.

Millers have been turning out this goods very cheaply and seem to have been finding this out lately. An advance of from 20 to 25 cents per 100 lbs. may be looked for within a week. In adulterating celery seed, ground rock was employed, in some instances the foreign material being as high as 40 per cent. of the whole. How many cases of indigestion were caused, how many operations for appendicitis were made necessary, how many deaths were brought about, there is no guessing. B. C. GROCERS' CONVENTION

Retailers From All Over the Province Discuss Trade Questions—Trying to Put Butter Business on More Satisfactory Basis—A Pleasant Social Banquet.

Vancouver, Oct. 5.—An event of particular importance to the trade was the first annual convention of the British Columbia Grocers' Exchange, which was held here on Tuesday and Wednesday, Sept. 29 and 30. Not only did it bring grocers together to discuss matters of importance generally but it also enabled them to meet in a social way, which will not be without its effect when points of difference arise. Grocers on the coast are very well organized, having district associations as well as the central body, which holds its meeting once a year. The sessions were held in the Orange Hall, the President, F. J. Carne, of Victoria, being in the chair.

In addition to local men in attendance delegates were present from the following outside points:—Victoria, A. Thornton, S. Greenhalgh, T. Redding, E. J. Wall, E. J. Heald and Thomas S. Futcher; Nanaimo, J. A. Macdonald; Abbotsford, N. Athin; Seattle, J. J. Higgins and Lovett M. Wood. As the Provincial Fair is on in New Westminster, it was hardly to be expected that delegates would be present from there because of pressure of business.

F. Welsh, on behalf of the Vancouver Retail Grocers' welcomed the delegates, briefly outlining the work set out, and was followed by the President, who gave a short address. After committees were appointed the remainder of Tuesday afternoon was devoted to a general discussion on the following problems:—"Should we seek legislation making a wife jointly liable for necessaries supplied?" "How can we best unite with manufacturers in maintaining prices on proprietary goods?" "Shall we seek to discourage free deals from manufacturers?"

There was a large attendance at the evening session when some interesting addresses were delivered. The wholesale and jobbing trades had been invited and W. H. Malkin, of the W. H. Malkin Company, spoke on the relations of the manufacturers, the wholesaler and the retailer. He dwelt upon the fact that the relationship of common interests between the three was real and vital and went into the question of how to improve, foster and maintain it. J. J. Higgins, Secretary of the Washington State Grocers' Association, read a splendid address on "Benefits of Association," which was listened to with interest. Mr. Welch, of the B.C. Soap Works, and Mr. Nelson, of the Standard Soap Company, also gave brief addresses.

Regulating Butter Prices.

On Wednesday morning also a conference was held between the grocers and representatives of the B.C. Creameries Association, when the grocers put forward a proposition to remove the present margin on butter and inaugurate a 15 per cent. discount. The price of butter here is regulated by the Creameries Association, the 200 retail grocers in the exchange having agreed to sell the butter at a margin of five cents a pound above the price set by the creamery men. The grocers showed that they were selling butter at a loss, the five cents margin not being enough when butter is high in price to pay for distribution expenses, although at certain times of the year, when the price is low, the margin is sufficient. They, therefore, requested that the creameries set the price according to market conditions, the retailers to sell at the same price, but that the grocers pay for the butter at a 15 per cent. discount all the year round. D. Mackenzie, of New Westminster, Secretary of the Creameries' Association, was notified of this request four months ago, but no reply had been received from him, and it was alleged that he did not notify the creameries. The grocers took the stand that if the eastern men treated them more fairly than the managers of the British Columbia creameries, they would refuse to handle the butter manufactured in this Province, and encourage the sale of eastern butter. Upon motion of F. W. Welsh, 1st Vice-President of the B.C. Retail Grocers' Exchange, it was decided that the executive of the exchange should meet the price committee of the Creamery Association. Only four creamery men attended the conference, namely: Mr. Des Brisay, Mission; A. R. Wilson, Cowichan; J. Nicholson, Victoria, and W. Duncan, Comox. The Creameries Association has a membership of nearly 40, and the grocers felt much aggrieved at the small attendance.

Following the reading in the afternoon of a paper entitled, "The relationship of manufacturers of proprietary articles with the retail trade," by E. J. Wall, of Victoria, a discussion ensued, which was taken part in by Simon Leiser, Victoria; Percy Wollaston, representing Wilson Bros., Victoria; F. Elsworthy, Secretary of the B.C. Wholesalers' Association, Victoria; C. W. Veysey, Hudson's Bay Company; Mr. Macdonald, of A. Macdonald & Co., W. J. McMillan and Mr. Hyslop.

A Pleasant Banquet.

The menu at the banquet in the evening was characteristically social. For instance, the salmon mayonnaise was put down as "great stuff to Phil Malkin on"; roast beef, Lockyer style; lobster mayonnaise, where Greek meets Greek; assorted nuts, Brenchley, McMillan, Rainsford; hard nuts, Kelly, Malkin, Oscar Brown. W. Clark made an able chairman, while Frank Wright tipped off the toasts in happy style. After "The King," the toasts with those responding, were as follows:—"Our Visitors," J. J. Higgins, Seattle; L. M. Wood, Seattle, editor of The Trade Register. "The Wholesale Grocery Trade," W. H. Malkin, H. T. Lockyer, W. J. McMillan and Percy Wollaston. "B.C. Retail Grocers' Exchange," Fred. Carne; James A. Macdonald, Nanaimo; "The Retail Trade," W. Clark, Vancouver; S. Greenhalgh, Victoria; F. W. Welsh, A. R. Johnson, Nanaimo. "The Wholesale Fruit and Produce Exchange," W. "Fishy" Haddock and Mr. Campbell. Others scheduled to speak were A. 'Ajax" Brenchley, D. "Smooth" Naismith, and Charles "Bull's-eye" Milne. "The Manufacturers and Brokers," A. "Battling" Nelson, "Hon. Soda" Ramsay and H. H. Welch. Others scheduled to respond were "Sir" Percy Shallcross and "Rev." F. T. Schooley. "The Ladies," Oscar Brown and Harry Ross.

The next convention will be held in Victoria next September, during the annual Exhibition there.

The New Officers.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President, Fred Carne, Victoria; First Vice-President, F. W. Welsh, Vancouver; Second Vice-President, George Adams, New Westminster; Third Vice-President, James Young, Nanaimo; Directors, T. Redding, Victoria; W. H. Walsh, Vancouver; E. J. Wall, Victoria; Edwin Pooke, Vancouver; Secretary-Treasurer, T. J. Hunter, Vancouver; Mainland Secretary, W. J. C. Hunter, Vancouver; Island Secretary, T. S. Futcher, Victoria.

FRUITS, VEGETABLES AND FISH

Native Fruit Lines Declining—Spanish Grapes and Florida Grape Fruit New Lines—Bananas Scarce—Potatoes Easing Up—Oysters in Demand.

The Canadian fruit markets are preparing for the change of seasons, and warehouses which presented airy and vacant spaces during the hot days, are again filling up with stocks. Native lines, while not showing a great diminution in supplies arriving yet, appear to be over the hill and the finer grades of various lines are about done. Native grapes still hold their own, but they have seen their best days, and Tokays from California, and Almerias and Malagas from Spain are the select varieties being sold. Niagara peaches of the better quality have given place to Elbertas from California; and Idaho plums have displaced almost entirely both the Canadian blue and green plums.

Apples are still advancing, some dealers in Ontario asking as high as $2.25 for present or future delivery. Some Eleme figs are being shown in the larger centres, and Toronto reports the first arrival of Florida grape fruit. Bananas are scarce in the West on account of Atlantic storms delaying the arrival of shipments from the West Indies.

Potatoes of all grades are easier in price up and down the country. Tomatoes are firming up and are getting scarce. The hardier native vegetable lines are at stationary prices, but the summer vegetables are declining in price and quality. Fish business is still good. Oysters are experiencing a brisk demand, and dealers are stocking up with canned, dried and smoked lines.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS—California Valencias are displaying a little more strength this week, although the maximum price of $5 has not changed there are none offering at $3.75 which was the minimum last week. To-day the cheapest line is offering at $4.25. Bananas are also stronger now, being quoted as high as $2. Montreal melons are practically off the market. Cranberries remain strong at $9. Niagara green grapes are quoted this week at 22c, instead of 20c, and Roger reds have also gone forward to 25c. Other lines of fruit are unchanged. Locally demand is only fair.

VEGETABLES—Green pickling tomatoes are now making their appearance, and are selling at 40c to 50c per gin box. Yellow preserving tomatoes are selling at 20c per gallon. Red onions of particularly fine quality were offering at $2.50 per barrel. Turnips have taken an upward turn now, being sold at $1.25 per bag. Green beans, of which there are only a few on the market, are now ruling at $1 per bag. Tomatoes are stronger at 60c to 80c a gin box. Other lines remain the same as at last quotations. FISH—The cool weather is exercising a good effect on the market, increasing the demand to a considerable extent. All kinds of fresh fish are plentiful, arriving in good supply. Haddock and cod are especially in good demand. Lake fish are arriving freely and are being taken up well. Fresh salmon are nearly finished. In smoked lines, haddies and kippers are in good demand and are in fair supply. These fish are arriving by express until the weather gets cooler. Demand for bulk oysters is increasing, and will continue to do so as the weather becomes colder. Shell oysters are expected on the market this week. In prepared and salted lines new Labrador herring are now in and demand for them is good. Green cod are arriving more freely, but prices remain firm. Salted salmon continues scarce, no new pack on the market yet. Skinless cod in cases and boneless fish are now selling freely. Locally trade is very brisk in the fish market. Dealers report volume of trade as good as former years.

TORONTO.

GREEN FRUITS—The market is quieter, so far as trading is concerned, than for some time back. Front East, Church and Colborne Streets are again showing signs of renewed energy and the movement of commission men from the summer fruit market cannot long be delayed. Just now, however, with the cooler weather, and the consequent set-up in fruit consumption, interest is divided. The cars come in just as fully loaded and in just as great numbers as at the height of the season a month ago, and stocks are perhaps greater because there is a little slower movement on account of less frequent sales. On the whole, however, fruit men are very well pleased with the business done during the season.

The turn of the tide is at hand and the end of the native fruit season is in sight. Strictly summer lines are done, and imported fruits are coming to their own again. There are still a great many blue and green grapes arriving from Niagara, but they are hardly so firm as the earlier stock. They are slightly easier in consequence. The better grades of peaches are done, and mediums are in fair supply only. Plums are about off, very few baskets being seen and those are of not better than fair quality. Some late hardy pears are offering, the kind that improve and grow soft for eating the longer they are kept.

Apples are going up, snows for eating being quoted at $1.75. Imported fruits are showing strength. Peaches and plums from Idaho and California and some grape fruit from Florida being really first-class stock. Then there are the first arrivals of Spanish grapes (Almerias and Malagas), giving the first touch of Christmas.

Oranges and lemons are getting scarce, and there will hardly be any more arriving until the new stock comes along. Jamaicas are filling in the gap between seasons in the orange market, and if more lemons are required New York will be drawn on for small lots. Bananas are scarce, due to the non-arrival of vessels at Atlantic ports. A fierce storm has been raging on the sea for the past couple of weeks, and, in fact, September was a hard month on shipping. New stock will soon be along to relieve the situation.

VEGETABLES—There is not so much interest in the vegetable line as in fruits. Nevertheless business is improving. Tomatoes are very scarce and are slightly firmer in price. Potatoes are a little easier and supplies are free. New Jersey sweets are down a little in price and so are both imported and native onions.

An effort is being made to enlarge the selling territory of the Canadian onion, at least the Ontario onion, which corresponds with the yellow Danvers of the United States. Certainly for this season the stock is A1. Bermuda onions are in a class by themselves. From August until March, Spain supplies the American markets. From April until the native green onions are placed on the market the little red onions from Egypt are in demand. The Ontario's and yellow Danvers have to fill in the vacant places during the late summer, the fall and winter. Now comes the attempt to push the natives, but the price will have to come down to compete with the Spanish onions.

FISH—Activity is noted in this line. Selling is good and plenty of supplies are arriving. The stock is excellent. A great quantity of canned, smoked and dried fish are being stocked, but the demand is more for the fresh lines. Some of the fish and commission houses are handling game sent in from the sporting territories in the north. Oysters are now in good selling demand, and all sea lines are having a big call. Perch is plentiful and other fresh water fish are rather free. Prices, while a little easier, are unchanged.

FACTS ABOUT GROCERIES

Information for Grocers and Clerks Regarding the Goods They Are Selling—Tea Found to be an Excellent Fertilizer—Jam Factories in India.

In the fields of scientific research probably the work in no single line has been attended with more satisfactory progress during the past few years than that directed toward the preparation of commercial fertilizers. This progress has taken place not only in the direction of determining more accurately the exact fertilizing value of the various products used for promoting the growth of certain plants or for increasing the general fertility of soils, but also in the direction of discovering new fertilizers, the value of which for such purposes has been hitherto unknown.

Observant persons may have noticed during the Fall and Winter just past the utilization of a new kind of fertilizer on the lawns and flower beds of the city parks in preparing them for next Summer's growth, says the New York Press. The substance, which is of a glossy brown color at a distance, is found on closer inspection to be composed wholly of small, moist leaves, which instantly remind one of the dregs at the bottom of a teapot. Such, in fact, they are, tea leaves; a fertilizer the high quality of which has but recently been discovered in this country, though it has probably been known for a long time in the parts of Asia where tea is grown. But in no city of America to-day, excepting St. Louis, can this unique plant food be found in use, for it was in New York city that its value is said to have been first learned, and it is here that it is produced in such large quantities as to be available.

It seems a strange fact that a product so foreign to the Mississippi valley, and even to the American continent, should be found so abundantly in St. Louis, but such is the case. The tea is imported literally in shiploads from China, Japan, India and Ceylon, by a chemical manufacturing company having its plant at Lafayette Avenue and Second Street, where a chemical product known as caffeine is extracted from it. The process it is put through does not impair, but rather increases the value of the tea as a fertilizer, and, after the caffeine is taken out, the by-product, useless to the manufacturers for other chemical purposes, is given away to the city in quantities of many tons, to be used in the parks.

The fertilizing value of the tea was first discovered quite by accident. It was noticed that on the open ground around the chemical plant wherever a small quantity of the leaves happened to fall there the grass and weeds took on most unusual vigor of growth. A few truck gardeners and farmers were then given some of the product for experiment, and they reported highly satisfactory results, some even stating that on the parts of a field treated with it the crop was twice as large as that on the parts of the same field not so treated. Finally an analysis, made at the experiment station of the University of Missouri, showed that it contained nitrogen, potash and phosphoric acid, the three most important constituents of a complete fertilizer, in such quantities and in such available form for plant food as to render it an unusually good material for increasing the fertility of any soil. Moreover, the chemical process through which it passes purifies it so thoroughly that it can carry to the earth nothing but its beneficial properties, while its peculiar quality of attracting moisture makes it uncommonly useful as a mulch. Small quantities of it were used in the St. Louis parks during the Summer of 1907, with such good results that, as before stated, it is being used exclusively for the coming season.

Jam Factories in India.

Three flourishing little factories at Simla, in the foothills of the Himalayas —7,000 to 8,000 feet above sea level— provide jams and preserves for the tables of the British exiles in India. "A very nice line of jams and preserves," says Consul-General Michael. "The strawberries, blackberries, raspberries, apricots, green gages, yellow plums, lemons, citrons and mangoes are grown on the sides of the mountains about Simla by the natives. The apples, quinces, peaches, damsons and pears are grown eighty miles north of Simla, in the mountains at Kulu. The guavas and oranges come from the plains near Lahore. The fruits from Kulu, eighty miles back in the mountains, are carried by coolies in baskets, which weigh each sixty pounds, strung over their backs. It requires four days for the coolies to make the trip in, over the narrow, tortuous path from Kulu to Simla. For this they receive 24 cents a day. The path or road is owned by the Government, and two annas, or four cents, toll is charged. This is paid by the firm that buys the fruit. Men and women carry baskets of fruit, the women, as usual, receiving less than the men for the service."

The assets of Godin & Desjardins, meat packers, Montreal, are to be sold.

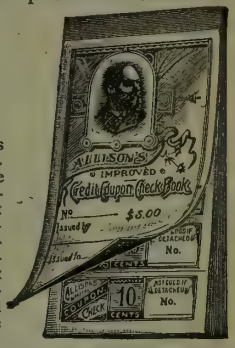
It Takes a Lot of Time to Keep Books

and when the entries are made up of many small items the expense is away out of proportion to the amount involved. Many attempts have been made to devise some safe and economical way to avoid this burdensome labor. The most practical substitute is the

Allison Coupon System



It is safe. Keeps a perfect record. Leaves no loophole for complaints. Eliminates 95 per cent of the labor. Requires the investment of but a trifling sum. Does not necessitate the employment of skilled clerks. Here is the plan:

If a man wants credit for $10.00 and you think he is good for it, give him a $10.00 Allison Coupon Book; and have him sign the receipt or note form in front of book, which you tear out and keep. Charge him with $10.00—no trouble. When he buys a dime's worth, tear off a ten-cent coupon, and so on until the book is used up. Then he pays the $10.00 and gets another book. No pass-books, no charging, no lost time, no errors, no disputes. Allison Coupon Books are recognized everywhere as the best. For sale by the jobbing trade everywhere.

RISING SUN STOVE POLISH IN CAKES

& SUN PASTE STOVE POLISH IN TINS

Chicago may follow example set in New York where manufacture and sale of inflammable and explosive liquid stove polishes is forbidden on account of the dangerous nature of this material when used by housekeepers.

A recommendation has been introduced into Chicago City Council calling attention to repeated accidents and a recent horrible death in Chicago from this cause and calling attention also to protection from like accidents, secured by ordinance in New York City.

Push RISING SUN Stove Polish and SUN PASTE Stove Polish which are always safe in the hands of the user. They please the housekeeper too. Good profit in them besides

Variety is the Spice of Life

IT is change which relieves the monotony of existence and adds to the enjoyment of both work and play. In the matter of reading, Noah Porter, the eminent American philosopher, once said, "No man can read with profit that which he cannot learn to read with pleasure." The October edition of the Busy Man's Magazine is so varied in contents and entertaining in character that it will afford profit and pleasure to all. The Choice of People Who Know

"2 in 1" Shoe polish is the choice of those people who know and appreciate the merits of a good article.

They know that "2 in 1" gives the quickest shine, the most brilliant shine and the most lasting shine of any shoe blacking they ever used.

2 in 1 SHOE POLISH

If "2 in 1" is the choice of discriminating people, don't you think it would pay you to handle it, Mr. Grocer? People of this class have trade that is well worth cultivating.

"Our advertising will bring you trade, while the merits of "2 in 1" will hold it."

The difference between "SALADA" and all other brands manifests itself so readily in the "SALES TEST" as to convince the most skeptical of its superiority as a leader in his tea department. Every pound of

All the profit goes straight into your pocket every time you hand the packet across the counter. "Just As Good" As Canadian Canners' Are Not As Good.

In almost every line of merchandise there is some leader, in comparison with which other articles of the same class are claimed to be "just as good." The claims of other packers that their brand is "as good as Canadian Canners'" is really a compliment to our brands. The shrewd merchant at once concludes that there is nothing to be gained by experimenting and that the way to hold and increase his trade is to stock the standard lines once more.

The crystal purity of Windsor Salt has never been questioned—the element of doubt is eliminated absolutely from "Windsor." And the consequent profit from selling it is a bulwark of strength for the grocer's standing with his trade.

The profit is legitimate—and permanent. Purity assures it—a profit as sure as the rise and set of sun. No argument can possibly avail against it. If it's a question of purity against profit, let the great sales of Windsor Salt prove the case.

Coming of Age

WITH this issue THE CANADIAN GROCER completes its twenty-first year. It has arrived at the time when men and businesses are considered to be of mature years—the time when they look over the past and plan their castles of the future.

It was my intention to have told in this issue the story of the building up of the paper, and of its plans for the future, but one of the most important developments in its history is now under way and its completion is necessary to round out such an article. Later in the year when these matters are arranged the story will be published with many interesting illustrations.

In the meantime let me say that I am giving much thought towards such improvement of the editorial organization as will give our readers a still better newspaper in every sense of the term. We still have a number of subscribers who began with us twenty-one years ago and thousands who have been on the lists for ten to twenty years. In that time fully a score of other papers have attempted a foothold on the field. Some lived a few weeks, some even a few years. Many of them were actually circulated free, but the readers of THE CANADIAN GROCER were ever loyal and they grew steadily in numbers. This may be taken as a clear indication that we have given a satisfactory paper to our Canadian, Newfoundland and West Indian readers. It has also found favor throughout the world. Probably no paper published in Canada is as frequently quoted in so many different countries. Articles are reprinted from it almost every week in the papers published in the United States, England, China, Japan, Germany, Spain, Greece, Ceylon, India and Italy.

Notwithstanding this tribute to its contents, there will be no standing still; but, as I said, it will in the next few months be very materially strengthened in several directions. Just as soon as the growth of the country and the development of the business will permit, additional writers will be added to the staff. Even to-day I don't think any weekly paper of any kind anywhere in Canada carries as large an organization as does THE CANADIAN GROCER, and I believe the ratio of its growth as a strong, influential and reliable newspaper in the next twenty-one years will be vastly greater than in the period just closing.

JOHN BAYNE MACLEAN

Tea Buying in Lands of Growth

By J. M. LOBB, TORONTO.

When China was the principal or only country producing black teas to any great extent, European buyers had their offices in three ports. North China teas (commonly called Monings) were bought at two ports up the Yangtse river, Kiukiang, about 420 miles from the mouth of the river being the market for Keemun, Mingchow and Moning teas; Hankow, 180 miles further up, for all other North China blacks. In later years with the growth of Hankow, the several buyers have discontinued their offices in Kiukiang, and teas from this district are now sent up the river and put on the market in Hankow.

Hankow and Its Surroundings.

Hankow is, no doubt, the most interesting tea market in the world, possibly Tea Buying in China—The "Hong," Taiping.

this is because it is the hardest. A city with a solid stone embankment for about three miles along the banks of the river, which is at this distance (600 miles from its mouth) a mile wide at high water, and rises every Spring from 36 to 43 feet above the low water mark, having a current midstream of 4 to 8 knots. The European Tea Hongs, which have offices down-stairs, living apartments upstairs, and tea rooms and warehouses adjoining, are nearly all situated in the British concession along the Bund and overlooking the river. Unfortunate are the few who are not so situated, for a breeze in Hankow in the latter part of June or in July or August is a treat, if not a necessity. But the charsee (tea-taster) has little time to enjoy the situation or the breeze, especially at the first of the season when the rush in the endeavor to secure the choice chops, keeps him in the tea room from 6 a.m.

Tea Buying in China—Outside a Chinese Hong: J. M. Lobb, the Writer of the Article, is on the Extreme Right. The Chinamen in the Centre are Native Brokers.

to 4.30 or 5 p.m., continually tasting the teas before him on an open market, so much depending on his taste and judgment in selecting best value from several districts which have each their peculiar flavor and character of leaf and liquor. It is, therefore, not the pleasure of being in Hankow that inspires interest in it to the charsee, for anyone would choose anywhere but there in summer and you might almost say that at this season it is the kind of a place that if you found the devil anchored to it you would pity him, but for the fact of it being an open market with its possibilities. A buyer in Hankow faithfully tasting the musters (samples) as they come in finds great interest in marking his selections for purchase, a buyer who shirks the standing and incessant tasting and trusts to luck can make horrible mistakes. There is little to guide one.

Tea Buying in China—Coolies Loading Tea.

Lists of competitors purchases of the previous day, more or less accurate, are "found out" by one's Chinese staff and are somewhat of a guide, but were a charsee to depend on these he would usually find that the best chops were bought the day before.

Teas are put on the market in Hankow through Chinese merchants or firms who either buy outright from the farmers or sell for the latters' account. TheEuropeans receive small samples of all teas as they arrive at the different Chinese hongs and negotiate for purchase through Chinese brokers representing the several hongs. These brokers go about in chairs carried by two coolies. They dress in silks, are as a rule gentlemanly, clever and honorable. One exception to this mode of transportation, at least, Hankow has seen in Chu Peter, who chose a rickshaw as a means to beat his competitors in his rounds. On wheels, with a runner in shafts, he could pass all "old custom" grandeur in chairs many times and have contracts signed and be back after new business before others get in their offers. Possibly the reason that his star did not reach the zenith, was that some buyers considered him too sharp.

The Origin of "Pidgin."

All educated Chinese in these days speak English with only a few traces of the old-time pidgin. A digression may be pardoned to explain the derivation of this term "pidgin." The Chinese cannot iterate sounds of "s" or "b," but would say for business, "pidginess."

TEA BUYING—A Typical Japanese Tea Garden.

Thus, in the old days, English tea buyers' language with Chinese was called pidginess English, afterwards contracted to pidgin English. Even at the present time, pidgin is the common term for business with Chinese, as well as Europeans in China.

The Tea Hong Staff.

The Chinese staff of an European tea hong in China consists of the compradore, head of all the staff, and the one who takes charge of all moneys, pays coolies, the expenses at the godown (warehouse), etc. It is through the compradore also that all teas are negotiated with brokers or the hongs they represent. There is then a shroff (writer), who makes up invoices, books, etc., and usually is more proficient in the art of penmanship than the average European entry clerk, is very quick at figures and invariably accurate. Next is the godown man, the head of the godown, who superintends receiving, marking, labelling and shipping of teas. Tea boys sort and number the samples, weigh into the sampling pots, superintend drawing teas and keep the poor charsee well behind his work. One could wish these tea boys were not so quick and bright or untiring. They are on the spot with teas "reddy-hot" in the tea-room at 6 a.m., and as late as 11 p.m., may often be seen entering samples in their tea books, ready for the next day. These are the principal factors in the staff and they are waited on by coolies to any number as required.

Methods of Buying.

The selections of samples as made are offered to the Chinese broker, who reports to his hong and if the price is acceptable or approximate, a half-chest of the tea is sent in, inspected and price agreed upon, the broker signing contract in the buyers' book kept for the purpose and fixing the purchase with his hongs or by contract with the tea man for whom his principals are selling. It sometimes happens that in order to get the tea man to accept the price the Chinese hong "squeeze man" will resort to methods of persuasion, such as locking the unfortunate man in a room in this hong and arguing the situation. Occasionally one hears of such a stubborn subject that broken chairs and tables are reported, but never heads, and Chinese tables and chairs are flimsy articles at any rate.

Teas coming from the country up the river are called Hankow teas, and are, as a rule, "hard cargo," that is, actually on the spot before offered Of these, several half-chests may be sent to different buyers for inspection, while negotiations for purchase are going on, and it is the first best offer that usually takes the tea.

Of Kiukiang teas, which have to come up the river to Hankow, one or two are sent ahead of the cargo, and in purchasing, the price is usually fixed before the half-chest, called "muster chest," is sent for inspection. There is never more than one muster chest of these teas available, and a buyer having this in his possession is sure of getting the lot it represents at the price originally offered, or if possible a little under. Once this muster is opened the buyer is morally bound to complete the contract, unless some distinct difference is found between this and the original small sample.

Tea Buying in Ceylon—A View of Colombo Harbor.

Tea Buying in Ceylon—One of Colombo's Main Streets. A Jinricksha Coolie in the Foreground.

Each purchase as completed is entered in a contract book and not taken into the godown until convenient or wanted for shipment. When wanted, the teas are ordered to be sent in, weighed gross, (five half chests of each), and tared, (three of each), samples drawn from five half chests are compared with the original muster chest and if satisfactory, paid for on average weight of those weighed and tared. The teas are ready packed, leaded and papered, but are labelled, matted and rattaned in buyers' godowns.

Settling Differences.

Should a difference be found in the samples drawn from the delivery and samples from the muster chest, the broker is called in, the difference brought to his notice as forcibly as possible that he may impress the tea man and secure the best "cut" (reduction) he can in original price. This is often a trying part of the business for if one buys fine tea and the delivery does not come up to expectations it is impossible to buy other lots, as the market is usually cleared quickly of choice chops. It is fortunate, however, that as a rule the Chinaman is honest and seldom does a glaring difference in delivery and sample occur, rarely, if ever, in the "crack" (best known) chops.

Inspection is thorough and careful, for cases have occurred proving the saying "for ways that are dark and tricks that are deep, the heathen Chinese is peculiar." Fortunately for the tea buyers, few of this class have entered into his sphere, however. In selecting, teas when first arrived fresh fired, change in character as fire goes off and must be watched so as not to get burnt teas or teas underfired. The latter are the most dangerous, as they cannot keep sweet for long. It is worthy of remark that in China lots of as many as one thousand two hundred half-chests (chops), sold on one sample, will run evenly and up to "muster." All these teas are bulked by hand.

Tea Room Appointments.

The appointments of the rooms in China, as also in Japan, are carefully planned. A long black counter, facing a black wall, usually plank, slopes out about fifteen degrees, with a window across the top, invariably facing north. Every facility for examining leaf and color of infusion is studied.

The Chinese Season.

The season in Hankow lasts from six weeks to three months, in which time buying is finished and most shipments completed and buyers betake themselves to other fields, Shanghai for green tea season, or home for a well-earned rest. The Chinese staff, after packing away musters for the next season, closing the office and tea rooms, take on other "pidgin," either in Shanghai or private ventures on their own account. One old broker remarked, when asked what he did when the season was over, "Mi go look, see beef." After much speculation it was discovered that he meant that he went to the country for his rest, a place where cattle graze quietly.

In former years six or seven British steamers went to Hankow, carrying full cargoes of black tea for London. With the growth of the tea industry in Ceylon, exports of China blacks have fallen to such an extent that it would not be possible for even one ship to get full cargo for London, and the best customers of China are now Russians. Usually four steamers go to Hankow and load for Odessa.

Buying in Ceylon.

Here the method of selection and tasting is much the same as in China. As the teas are sold by public weekly auctions, however, there is some chance of comparison with purchases in previous week's sale, as a guide in buying. The tea-tasters' office hours are not so strenuous as in China, but as tea never stops growing in Ceylon (the only country in the world producing tea all the year round) the work never ceases, and when at Christmas and Easter one or two auctions are cut out, the holiday only leads to an increase in the number of samples in the auction following. In Ceylon and India purchases are made through English brokers, each firm of brokers having their own consignments from different estates, and personally conduct the selling of teas printed in their particular catalogue for each week's auction. As the bidding is open, it is possible for the buyer to watch the operations of his competitor and make his selections accordingly. One's mind must be quickly made up as to limit of price, there being little delay in the fall of the hammer, and hesitation as to whether the value is there at the usual one rupee cent higher (about 1-3c of our money), means lost opportunity.

The Brokers' Comprehensive Duties.

Teas come down to Colombo from the estates for sale and small samples are sent down to every firm of buyers, numbered according to brokers' catalogues. These samples are delivered four or five days before the date of auction, An ordinary sale would furnish from 2,000 to 2,500 samples of all kinds for the tea-taster to go through and make selections from. If he is in the market for every grade, viz, Broken Orange Pekoe, Broken Pekoe, Orange Pekoe, Pekoe, Pekoe Souchong, Souchong and Dust. The necessity of tasting and valuing all of these takes a deal of energy and patience to continue. Valuations are marked on catalogues, which the buyer takes to the auction sale for reference. It is necessary to remember from the notes on this catalogue the character of leaf, liquor and desirability of the tea for certain markets. Although the auctions are interesting to a keen buyer, there is not the same opportunity to beat the market as in China. One might even buy on the information he gets from others' bids in the auction room, without tasting the teas at all. This would be possible in Ceylon or India, but is impracticable in the open markets of China.

Ceylon and Indian teas are delivered upon payment of cash on date of auction or not later than ten days. The chests and half-chests are ready for shipment, requiring only to be marked with stencil shipping marks, and extra hooped when intended for American shipment. In all the branches of this great industry of Ceylon the tea-tasters and brokers, (a successful broker is necessarily conversant with the quality of his goods, hence a tea-taster also) do the work. The planters, who are for the most part a jolly lot of Britons, live in the beauty spots of this charming island, and although sometimes lonely and far from friends they can well enjoy life.

Book-keeping in a Modern Grocery

By W. A. CHADWICK

In beginning this article it might be well to describe my idea of a modern grocery. It is a clean, well-ventilated store, having about a dozen departments employing about ninety employes, with its necessary equipment of teams and catering to the public in every possible way.

Our business has been established over twenty-five years, and, of course, in that time there have been many improvements in the method of their bookkeeping. But one feature they had continued all these years and that was the old-time pass-book. When I was appointed head bookkeeper one of the first things I suggested was doing away with the pass-book and issuing statements in their place, and the introduction of duplicate order books for our order men and store clerks.

These suggestions were immediately put into operation, and are working fine. With duplicate order book the order man takes his orders, and sends his book to the store to be filled, the orders are all filled and then the book is turned into the office to be audited. When that is done the original and duplicate orders are separated and the original order is left at the store and the duplicate sent with the goods. The original orders are then paged and posted to the route ledgers. After being posted they are put into holders holding about 2,000 pages. The salesmen in the store use the same kind of books in making their charges, giving the customer the duplicate or sending it with the order. Every afternoon at five o'clock these books are returned to the office and a new supply given out for the following day. These used books are taken by one of the bookkeepers and the original orders are all torn out. These are separated, and paid orders are distributed to their respective ledgers. They are also paged just as the order man's slips were and are put in the same kind of holders. The paid orders are all checked up later when the cash is turned in.

Both order men and delivery men carry a duplicate cash book with them, and when receiving cash enter same on cash book, and every morning turn in their money and the original cash pages they used the day before, and their cash should agree with the amount on their cash pages. They retain the duplicate cash pages for reference. These cash pages are distributed to their respective bookkeepers, each bookkeeper having a certain number of ledgers to keep, and the cash received is credited to their respective accounts. That done, the cash pages are filed away in holders, each holder containing one main cash record. We also receive a great deal of cash at the office. It is entered in a cash book and posted in the usual way, and each day's leaves are filed away in a holder.

On the twenty-seventh of each month we close our books and make out our statements, so as to have them ready for mailing on the first.

Here is where we have made a saving of time over the old pass-book system. By the old way the pass-books had to be returned to the office and compared with our ledgers, and all charges not entered on the pass-books had to be added, taking much time and causing a great deal of trouble. By the new system a bill of items goes out with every order, and on the first of the month we send out our statements calling for only dates and amounts.

We have a book called a collection book, which each order man carries with him. These books are made up every week and show the amount owed by each customer right up to date, giving the amount of each individual purchase. Our ledgers are all divided into routes covered by our order men.

We have two ledgers for our customers who do not have our order men call on them, but who telephone most of their orders. We also have a petty ledger for small transient accounts.

CANADIAN GROCERY STORES—Interior of Jas. Clinkskill's Store, Saskatoon.

A Model Corner Grocery

CONVENIENCE AND COMFORT IN A COMBINED STORE AND DWELLING.

To combine a store and dwelling in such a way that convenience and comfort may both be realized to the highest extent and that neither business nor home life may interfere with each other looks at first sight to be no easy task. The dwelling combined with the store is perhaps not the ideal, but nevertheless, it offers many advantages, and to a great many grocers is an absolute necessity. A building of such a nature, which seems to carry out about as far as possible all requirements and this at a moderate cost, is illustrated and described in the following article. It will be interesting to all grocers, but particularly so to those who anticipate building. The premises occupied are those of Geo. Lever, grocer, at the corner of Bloor and Major Streets, Toronto. The building is not altogether a new one, being erected a few years ago, but it was so well arranged and so carefully planned that few stores of a like class built more lately can show any improvement.

A MODEL CORNER GROCERY—A View of the Interior.

The store is situated adjacent to one of Toronto's newest and best residential sections, a district that has become very popular with the better class of citizens in the last few years, and is rapidly being filled up. To the north of Bloor St. in the vicinity the homes belong nearly all to the professional class, and the housewives are naturally pretty good customers. To the south the section is older and not so pretentious, so that the store draws a pretty general class of trade. The location is fortunate from another standpoint, in that there is not, nor is there likely to be, another grocery nearer than a couple of blocks in any direction. This, in a district which is coming to be pretty closely settles, ought to be at least one factor of a good business.

Planned by the Owner.

Geo. Lever, the happy proprietor, who, by the way, may be seen standing in a very businesslike attitude in the doorway in the engraving of the store front here shown, has had a good deal of business in grocery stores in both city and country, having practically spent his life in the business. "I've spent some time in a good many stores," he says, "and got a good chance to see the faults of all of them. When I got ready to build my own, I drew up a sort of suggestive plan of the whole thing, store, house, stable and all and turned these over to the architect. The whole thing was built according to my own ideas." The building, the exterior of which may be readily seen in the engraving, is of red brick, tastefully decorated with cut stone. It is set far enough back from the street line to allow for a good-sized display of fruit and other goods when desired, and yet not far enough to lose the good effects from the windows. On the east side a little grass plot, which is kept in tidy shape, helps a lot in the general appearance of the place. Behind the store proper is a small yard, and in the rear of this a neat brick stable, which cannot be seen in the engraving.

A Convenient Store.

Naturally the most interesting feature is the store itself, and through his planning Mr. Lever has managed to secure about as convenient an interior as one ordinarily sees. An excellent idea of the interior may be obtained from the accompanying engraving. The proprietor does not believe in filling all the floor space with tables and counters. "We like room to move round," he says, "and the way we hustle things out of here on Saturday nights is a wonder." A great deal of attention has been paid to the arrangement of stock so that it will be both attractive, and so far as possible, within reach. As will be seen, the bottled and package goods most frequently called for are on shelves directly behind the one long counter. These shelves are covered with sliding glass doors which aid a good deal in keeping the stock clean.

Immediately under the shelving a row of tin tea caddies for lines of bulk teas and the lighter lines of bulk goods are built in, in such a way as to allow them to be gotten at most conveniently. Below this again is a row of large zinc-lined tilting bins. Under the counter directly opposite is another row of these tilting bins for various lines of sugar, cereals, etc.

The Front Elevation.

Side Elevation of Store and Residence.

On the other side of the store is another line of shelving in which is kept some of the less frequently called for lines of canned goods and other lines of fancy groceries. In the centre of the store at the rear the refrigerator is placed, and just in front of this, behind the coffee mill, shown in the illustration, is a little meat table, where ham and cooked meats are cut up.

Hidden behind the piles of goods toward the rear on the right a little office is fitted up, with a good-sized desk and small safe, all out of the way and hidden from the sight of the ordinary customer. On the end of the counter, near the door, is a fair-sized show case filled with a general line of confectionery.

The Windows.

One of the store's best features are its two large front and one side window. These are kept tastefully trimmed, and prove to be mighty good value as business drawers. Above the plate glass the neat diamond-shaped top is fitted with a refracting glass which helps to brighten up the store.

There is room enough in front, also, to allow for a good-sized display of fruit, in which the store specializes during the season, on either side of the doorway.

Ground Floor Arrangement.

The convenient arrangement of the rest of the ground floor may be seen from a glance at the plan shown herewith. Directly in the rear of the store proper is a good-sized dining room, with a door opening directly into the store, a very convenient arrangement during busy days. Alongside this runs a hallway. The partitions are so arranged, however, that they can be readily removed, if it becomes necessary at any future time to enlarge the store. At the end of the hall is a small store room, and this opens directly onto the yard. Behind the dining room is the hall of a very pleasant little side entrance, and a door from this opens into a good-sized kitchen.

The Basement.

A stairway from the hall just out of the store leads to the basement. This is divided into three sections. The front section is used as a storage room for canned goods, sugar, and other bulky stock. Here, too, a pipe running overhead carries off the water from the refrigerator in the store above. In the northeast corner, too, a small water motor has been put in to drive the coffee grinder above. The middle section of the basement contains the hot water heating plant, coal bins, etc., and some of the household equipment. The rear room, which is reached by a flight of steps from the outside, is used for the storage of vegetables and fruit.

FIRST FLOOR

Commodious Upper Floors.

The plans of the two upper floors give a good idea of the abundance of room furnished for a good-sized family. A large parlor and two bedrooms on the first floor and three more on the second floor provide for stowing away a good many sleepers. With a family of four boys and a girl, however, Mr. Lever manages to fill them up pretty well. A good-sized balcony at the rear of the second floor, which may be seen in the plan of the rear elevation, provides a pleasant place to spend the summer evenings.

A Convenient Stable.

Directly behind the house, though far enough away to avoid any unpleasantness, is a neat brick stable, built also according to Mr. Lever's suggestions. It provides stallroom for two horses, and two or three rigs can be stored downstairs. One of these includes a trim little runabout, which is used considerably after business hours.

The front doors of the stable open on the yard. A door at the rear opens on a cross alley, so that it is possible to drive right through and backing in, and turning is obviated.

On the floor above a couple of winter rigs are stored, as are also several tons of hay, and thus, with a capacious oat-bin, which connects with the floor below by a chute, takes up about all the room above.

A large door from the upper floor opens on the alleyway and above this is fitted a sling and pulley for hoisting rigs, hay, etc,, when necessary.

The delivery outfit belonging to the store may be seen in one of the engravings.

A study of the plans and the various conveniences of the building will convince one at once that taken altogether this store with its accompanying dwelling and stable, is about as complete as could well be imagined for a store of its class.

The Architect.

The plans and specifications of the building were prepared by J. Francis Brown, Toronto, who has also built several other grocery stores of a similar and of different class in the city.

GET CLOSE TO YOUR CUSTOMERS.

There is nothing which a customer appreciates quite so much, perhaps, as to feel that he or she is in close personal contact with the boss of the store.

This rule applies just about as well to the very big stores as it does to the small general merchandise establishment where all the work is done by the owner and one clerk.

There is a certain big dry goods store in the City of Topeka. Go into that store almost any day during the busy hours, and you will find the owner of the store himself walking about through the aisles, greeting the customers that he knows, watching to see that each customer is properly attended to, keeping his eye on the large force of clerks, and now and then stepping in politely and unostentatiously to help some slow customer make a selection. There is nothing that helps a slow customer so much as to get some personal consideration from the head of the establishment. It makes him feel that his visits to the store are appreciated, and that he will get the very best there is in stock for the money.

One merchant who ran a medium-sized store put in all his time in a little back office figuring on how to save two per cent. on this or that article, or how to get a little more profit out of some other line. He seldom was seen by the customers of the establishment, and his business proved very unsatisfactory until a shrewd business man suggested to him that he place his desk near the front of the store, where he might be able to greet people who came in, and turn them over to the proper clerk for attention. He tried the plan, and found that it worked amazingly well. It transformed a losing business into one of good profits.

To be on hand to greet with courtesy a new customer and see that he gets what he wants, or to shake hands cordially with an old friend and say, "Hello, John. What are you looking for?" is worth dollars to the boss of the firm. He can't afford to lose this personal leverage, until his business grows so great and his field of operations is so immense that individuality disappears and the administrative details require his constant supervision.—Merchants' Journal.

TWO EMPTIES.

Two tramps approached a railroad telegraph office not far from New York the other day and looked hungrily through the window, but there was not even a dinner pail in sight to induce them to ask for food. One of them finally tapped on the window, and the operator left his key long enough to inquire:

"Well, what can I do for you?"

"Just report two empties going east," replied the tramp, with a grin, and started down the track toward New York.

The Making of Brushes and Brooms

A DESCRIPTION OF THE MACHINERY AND PROCESSES USED IN A MODERN FACTORY.

To know how anything is made, the processes of manufacture that have been gone through, the good and bad points of any article is one of the biggest helps possible in selling manufactured articles. A good salesman must know his goods thoroughly and the better he is acquainted with them the better impression is he likely to give the customer.

Some of the most common articles handled by the grocer are those dirt removers so much in demand by the housewives, brushes and brooms, and yet in spite of their very common use and large sale, it is safe to say that very little is known about how either of these articles is made. How many grocers know, for instance, that the material in the ordinary scrubbing brush is rice root, imported from Mexico, or that the best broom corn comes from Illinois?

With a view to imparting some useful information along these lines, a representative of The Grocer took a walk recently through one of the most complete manufacturing plants for this kind of goods in Canada, the story of which is told herewith.

The Evolution of the Brush.

A small edition of a saw mill performs the first operation in the evolution of a modern brush. The wood is brought in the form of lumber, carefully selected so as to be free from knots, and is sawn into rough "blanks," about the size, but rather far from the shape of the finished brush handle.

The next operation is shaping and smoothing, which is done by a series of machines of the planer variety, adapted to the different varieties of brushes. The blanks for some of the finer varieties of brushes are sawn in two to provide for inserting the filling.

Boring the holes to receive the hair or "filler" is an interesting operation. In most varieties of brushes these have to be put in at different angles, and this is done by a remarkable automatic machine which bores 64 to 100 holes, according to the size and nature of the brush, in a time almost unbelievable.

The Brushing Material.

The material for filling the blanks, the real brush, varies, of course, according to the use to which the brush is to be put. Stable brooms, for instance, are filled with what is known as "bass," a tough, fibre-like substance, which is grown in India. Most of the scrub brushes, so familiar to the grocer, are filled with rice root, which comes from Mexico and goes through a process of water curing before being ready for use. It is an interesting fact that this rice root is steadily increasing in value, the price to-day being three times what it was ten years ago In other scrub brushes, again, bass and other fillers are used. The finer brushes are filled with hair and bristles of various grades and qualities, some of this material being exceedingly expensive.

MAKING BRUSHES AND BROOMS—A Corner in the Brush Department.

Filling the Brush Blanks.

How they get the "filler" in the holes is usually a puzzle to the inquisitive small boy, and, indeed, also to many of his elders. In the finer, hair-filled brushes, the blanks of which are sawn in two, the hair is deftly shoved through the holes, bound with wire and glued in place, the top section of the handle being afterwards glued or screwed on. Scrub brushes are filled by a most ingenious machine, which has only recently come into use. A supply of the rice root fibre is fed into the machine and the brush handle, already bored, placed below. A set of plungers, carrying the requisite quantity of rice root filler and above that a wire staple, descend, shove the filler, doubled, into a loop, into the holes, and drive the staples in on top. This operation all takes only a fraction of a second, and the machine operates as fast as an attendant can feed in the blanks.

A Triple Operation.

With scrubbing brushes, however, the holes cannot be all filled at one operation. The material, it will perhaps be remembered, is of three different lengths, the outer lengths set at a different angle. The holes for these have to be filled at another operation. After the brushes are filled, the rice root is trimmed off evenly in another machine. With the larger stable brushes the "bass" filler is shoved in by hand and stapled in a way similar to that followed in a machine. As a result of this stapling the brushes can be placed in hot water, or acids, without danger of loosening the filling. In other light brushes, where such hard usage is not expected, the hair or bristles are dipped in pitch and shoved tightly into the holes, being afterward trimmed off uniformly.

The Finishing Processes.

After being filled, the finer varieties of brushes are painted or varnished and then find their way, with the less pretentious scrub and stable brushes, to the packing room, where they are placed in cartons bearing the firm's name and trade mark and ultimately passed into the warehouse.

The Development of the Broom.

So much for brushes. The manufacture of brooms is even more interesting. Here, of course, the principal part is the broom corn, and a little homily on this is not out of place.

The ordinary round wooden handles are turned in a special machine, and then painted or varnished as the case may be. The bamboo for bamboo-handled brooms, is brought from Japan in large quantities, all ready for use.

MAKING BRUSHES AND BROOMS—Another View in the Brush Department.

The best broom corn, the manufacturers say, comes from Illinois. The climate and land there seem to be particularly favorable for the production of the tough, clear straw which is no necessary in a good broom. Broom corn is also grown to some extent in Oklahoma, Nebraska, Kansas and New Mexico, but Illinois holds the premier place as the grower of this much-used product. Broom corn is raised much like Indian corn, except that at a certain stage of its growth the plants are bent over. A field of corn treated in this way naturally presents rather a peculiar appearance, the bent-over plants forming a sort of roof. After a certain length of time it is pulled, dried, packed in bales and shipped off to the factories.

The broom corn, when a bale is opened at the factory, smells very like a field of new mown hay. Coming from the bale it is sorted according to length, quality and color, the best corn being utilized, of course, for the best quality of brooms, and the shorter lengths being made into various lines of whisks, as described hereafter.

Broom Corn Advancing.

Broom corn, too, is advancing in price, along with a great many other commodities. A few years ago it was possible to make a fairly good broom to sell at 15 and 20 cents. Since then the cost of material and labor has advanced so materially that a really good article cannot well be made now to sell below 25 and 30 cents.

Building Up the Broom.

The initial processes of broom making are particularly interesting. The broom maker, who goes through an apprenticeship and learns his trade, just as a grocer should do, stands in front of a peculiar machine, a combination of vise, and wheels and pulleys, driven by the foot, in which the broom is literally built. After the bare handle is clamped in the machine the broom-maker selects a handful of corn, places it with the tips pointing to the upper end of the handle, then drives in a staple and bends the handful of corn over to its final position. This process is repeated and subsequent handfuls of corn added, each being bent over and pressed together by the machine, until the exterior assumes a somewhat symmetrical appearance. This all sounds easy, but it takes an immense amount of skill and experience to turn out a really first-class broom. Some idea of the quantity of broom corn used may be gained from the fact that there are about 20 to 25 pounds of corn in a dozen ordinary brooms.

The Finishing Touches.

At this stage, while the broom somewhat resembles the finished article in form. it is rather a crude affair, so far as finish is concerned. The ends of the strands of corn are trimmed off so as to give a uniform sweeping edge, and then the broom is run through a "scraper" to take out the seeds of the corn. These seeds, by the way, make excellent chicken feed.

Sewing the Brooms.

The last process, and the one which gives the broom its flat finished form, is that of sewing. The machines which do this work, while not resembling the ordinary sewing machine, work on somewhat the same principle, though a good deal of ingenuity has been applied to adapt them to this special purpose. The broom is placed upright in the machine, and the needles, carrying the colored string, pass through the corn, binding the stalks closely together and pulling the broom into the smooth, flattened shape which aids so materially in sweeping. Four and five strings are put on the brooms, and sometimes, when to be used for special heavy purposes, they are bound with wire by hand. The machines, however, do nearly all this work. How rapidly the machines work is seen in the fact that with one attendant they sew about 40 to 50 dozen daily.

After being sewn and inspected, the brooms are packed in dozens and piled in the warehouse. The enormous piles one sees are considerable of a surprise and give an idea of the importance of the industry.

Broom Corn Whisks.

Whisks are made in much the same way as brooms, from the shorter straw. The long barber's whisks or dusters are made of broom corn alone, the handle of the straw tightly compressed Other whisks are provided with handles of various forms into which the broom corn stalks are pushed and fastened.

How to Use Brooms.

A word in conclusion as to the use of brooms might provide a helpful hint for a customer. A broom should be hung up, and not allowed to stand on the floor as this latter treatment will shorten its life materially. Again, it should be used in sweeping with a brisk, brushing motion and should not be pushed before one so that the work must all be done by one side of the broom. Nothing so quickly breaks the corn and shortens the life of the broom as this. It pays, too, to buy a good broom. They last longer and are so much more satisfactory in the end that it more than makes up for the little difference in price.

HOW SHE GOT IT.

A little girl was sent by her mother to the grocery store with a jug for a quart of vinegar.

"But, mama," said the little one, "I can't say that word !"

"But you must try," said the mother, "for I must have vinegar, and there's no one else to send."

So the little girl went with the jug, and, as she reached the counter of the store, she pulled the cork out of the jug with a pop, swung the jug on the counter with a thud, and said to the astonished clerk :

"There ! Smell of that and give me a quart !"—Mother's Magazine.

The Grocer and His Partner

HELPFUL HINTS AS TO HOW TO GET ALONG TOGETHER.

When partners disagree at least one of them ought to smile. A disagreement with a set face and no smile generally costs the firm some money.

Enthusiasm and harmony are necessary to a successful store and a successful partnership.

If you get team work throughout the store there must be team work among the heads of the concern.

You cannot get partners made to order. You must take them as you find them.

Sometimes the fellow you think would make the best partner turns out to be the least fitted for it.

And again the fellow who would be the last one you would hitch up with may make the best trotting mate for you.

If your partner is a worker, if he takes interest in the business, if he holds his end up or anywhere near it, you are well hooked up as partners go.

You have heard the old story about Push and Pullback. It has been told on this page several times, but it is worth repeating.

Push was popular. He was a good salesman. Every one liked him because he was agreeable. Always said the right thing at the right time and rarely said anything disagreeable. His voice was music to the ear of the customer. His face always shone with cheer.

Push wanted to do more business. He did everything in his power to make the people of the community like the store. Every one said that if Push was running the business and was not handicapped by Pullback the store would do twice as much business as it was doing.

Pullback was courteous, but very firm. He looked after the collections and the finances. He was not near as popular in any sense as Push. Some traveling salesmen passed an unfavorable verdict on Pullback when he cut down the orders placed by Push. Cutting down the orders sometimes made Push mad, but Pullback was firm and insisted that for the good of the business it must be done.

Before Pullback would cut down these orders he always discussed the matter with Push. Nobody could say that Pullback was grouchy or disagreeable. He had the same qualities as any other good watch dog of the treasury.

People came to Push asking for credit. It was agreed that Pullback was to have the whole say on credits. Everybody liked Push as he passed them on to Pullback with his smile. Push frequently disagreed with Pullback about the financial responsibility of customers. Pullback firmly insisted upon the observance of certain rules in granting credit. He had iron-clad rules regarding a settlement day. Many people did not like Pullback on this account.

One day the firm of Push & Pullback dissolved. Push started a store of his own. Pullback kept the old business.

Many customers of the old store became the customers of Push. Everybody said Push's store was getting the most business. So it ran on for about two years. Push was doing more and more business and Pullback doing less.

At the end of two years the old feeling between the two men had worn out enough so that they could get together and talk things over. In comparing results Push found that he had done a wonderfully large business but had made no money ; too many dead-beats and too much overbuying.

Pullback's business was in fine shape financially. Accounts were well cleaned up and the stocks contained few odds and ends or unsalable goods, But he had not done enough business to make it very profitable.

So the old firm decided to get together again and from that time on the team pulled toward a successful result. Each had learned his lesson.

Has your partner qualities which you have not ? Have you qualities which he has not ? Do not criticize him because he is not like you. Those differences in makeup are necessary to a successful partnership.

Above all things, do not talk about each other to any one outside. Keep still and "saw wood." Remember Push and Pullback. Maybe your case is similar to theirs.—Commercial Bulletin and Northwest Trade.

Keep the new things before your customers, both by display, advertising and suggestion. People can be persuaded to buy a grist of things they never thought they needed.

Handling Customers the World Over

BY A. G. HALES IN THE STOREKEEPER.

The following article, by a gentleman who has traveled in most quarters of the world, and has made himself acquainted with the grocery trade of a good many countries, throws considerable light on methods of treating customers, and will be interesting from this standpoint, as well as the lessons taught.

There is no trade that should be kept up-to-date with more scrupulous care than the grocery trade, both wholesale and retail. And if I am to judge by the complaints I hear from housewives amongst all classes of the community, there is at the present time much room for improvement.

I go about a good deal, and mix with folk of all degrees, and I often think it is a pity that people in the grocery line do not hear some of the scathing remarks that fall upon my ears. The general consensus of opinion amongst the womankind of these isles seems to be, that the grocers badly want waking up. They are behind the times, and are content to move along in the same old ruts and grooves in which their fathers moved. By so doing they help to keep back the progress of the nation as a whole, for when one wheel lags, the whole coach is delayed.

The Grocer in China.

In some circles it is considered witty to sneer at traders, either wholesale or retail. I do not belong to that circle; because the experience I have gained from travel in many lands, east and west, has taught me that the bona fide trader is the backbone of every nation; not the lawyer, the politician, the soldier, or the indolent aristocrat.

In many respects the Chinese are the wisest people in the world. They have lived and multiplied, whilst other nations have risen, fallen and passed away. In China a grocer ranks higher than a great actor; higher than a soldier, or a politician. The Chinese recognize that a grocer provides the wherewithal to live. He sells foodstuffs, and the comfort of many rests in his hands. He is an important factor in the welfare of a nation.

In Great Britain I have observed a certain amount of snobbery amongst the trading classes, which detracts from their manliness. A young fellow in the grocery line of business goes from his village shop, the city store, or his wholesale house, to the seaside for his holidays, and, in most cases he either tries to palm himself off as something else, or he hides his trade as if it were something to be ashamed of.

Be Proud of Your Trade.

He blushes to be called a grocer, forgetting that the grocers of old London were men of mark and high standing in the land at a time when writers, lawyers and actors were looked upon as being little better than vagabonds fit for the stocks. To my mind it is a sign of degeneracy, when a man tries to hide, in a shamefaced manner, all the evidences of his calling or trade. No man should be ashamed of his calling. If he is, he does not pick up much useful information from others, because he shuns the society of the very men who could be useful to him. He excuses himself by saying that he "hates to talk shop." Fools mostly do. The wise man picks up hints as he goes along, and turns those hints to his own advantage.

In this country there is too much snobbery, too much sham, too much posing, and I notice that the grocer is as bad as any in this respect, when he is away from his shop. He is ashamed to have it known that he sells tea and sugar, soap and candles. Just as if a smart, up-to-date seller of such articles were not as good a man as the person who sells law, or poetry, or pictures.

You should cut out the sub-heading, paste it on your hat, young man. The person who is ashamed of his daily work is seldom of much account. When he palms himself off as something else he is a fraud and a sham, and quite as much a fraud as an inferior article that is sold under a first-class but fraudulent label.

What You Find in Germany.

There is not so much of this kind of humbug abroad. Take Germany, for instance. If you travel far with a young German grocer he lets you know what he is, and he is thirsty for knowledge concerning his business. If he finds out that you have been in lands where tea, coffee, tobacco, rice, sago, sugar, spices and so forth are grown, he is after you for information all the same. He talks "shop." He is not such a vanity-smitten fool as to lose an opportunity of learning something for nothing, which he may turn into money.

When a traveler finds a young man trying hard to get something out of him, which is of no commercial value to the traveler, but may be of service to the questioner, he generally passes out the required information, and it leaves him none the poorer, whilst it enriches the seeker after knowledge. Your young British grocer will not so seek a knowledge, for fear he may give away the fact that when he is at home he works behind a counter for his daily bread. That makes him not only a snob, but it keeps him behind the times.

Conditions in America.

The American grocer is not like that. He may lie a bit about his salary, and tell exaggerated stories concerning his 'cuteness in the matter of "deals" with his rivals. But he is proud of the fact that he is a grocer, and he lets you know that before he is bald-headed he is going to have a big store of his own. In Australia there is none of this same shabby pride. A man says "I'm in the grocery line" with just as much pride as the big stock jobber says "Oh, I'm on 'Change."

And why not? Surely it is as dignified to sell a ham, or a side of bacon, as to sell shares in a "salted" gold or a silver mine! If a young Australian were to travel on the "snobbing" business, he would not only be disliked by his fellow tradesmen, but everybody else would look down upon him as a fool. Yet, with all his frank independence, I think the Australian grocer is a more civil and obliging man to his customers than the grocers of the old land.

The Australian Grocer.

Your Australian grocer looks upon himself as the equal of any man who comes into the shop where he is serving. And he treats his customers as he himself would like to be treated. He is not at all obsequious to the great squatters, neither is he rude to the tramp who comes in for his "six-penn'orth" of tea. He takes a greater pride in his work than the "born" grocer does. He is certainly on the lookout for what he terms "wrinkles of the trade," and it is his boast that he is as up-to-date as it is possible for him to be with the supplies at his command.

He is never above taking a hint. Let me explain. I was once walking along a street in Sydney with a celebrated color artist, who invariably dressed more like a tramp than a man of money. My artist friend stopped in front of a grocer's shop, and watched a man "dressing" his window. He was making a brave show with a vast pile of tinned fruits, meats and vegetables, the gaily-colored labels giving him ample material to make a fine display. After a while the grocer came out onto the footpath to survey the effect of his work, and it was evident he was well pleased with what he had done. My friend ventured to make a suggestion. He was one of the mildest-mannered men on earth, though a great artist. The grocer looked at the shabby figure and smiled, but he had the sense to listen, even whilst he smiled.

Something in the trampish-looking person's remarks held the grocer's attention, and it ended in his going inside and pulling down his pyramids of tinned goods. Then he and the artist went to work and rebuilt the pyramids, the artist entering into the spirit of it, because he loved color more than anything else on earth. When the window was finished it looked a picture, and crowds gathered round to admire it.

"If you're out of a job, mister," said the grocer, "I'll give you one !" "Right you are," answered the artist, "when you happen to have something in my special line let me know," and he pushed his card into the grocer's hand, and walked away laughing. The grocer laughed also, and well he might, as he had been taught how to make a window look lovely with gay labels, and that meant money to him.

Now I wonder how many window dressers there are in Britain who would not resent, as an impertinence, a hint offered them by a shabby fellow on the pavement !

The Australian likes hints, he likes criticism, because he gets something for nothing. He doesn't wait for trade to come to him ; he goes out and looks for it. And when he has been out canvassing for orders, he doesn't say that he has been having a pleasant jaunt in the country. He's a business man, and proud of it.

HONEST GOODS AND HONEST METHODS WIN.

When put to the test of time, the people will be found to favor honest goods and honest business methods. Sometimes this does not seem to be apparent. Very often it appears unreasonable to have this confidence in humanity. And because this is another case of things not being what they seem, merchants who try to give genuine value sometimes become discouraged.

The people cannot be fooled all the time. They do not like to be humbugged. Only the ignorant and the very poor, the buyers of shoddy, the very cheapest trade, believe and respond to humbug advertising. In the long run, honesty pays, in advertising as in all things.

Let not the merchant who tries to give genuine value be discouraged. Sometimes honest merchants are inclined to refrain from advertising because they conceive, justly or otherwise, that competitors lie in their advertising. They think that the effect of legitimate publicity is thereby discounted. Nothing could be more distant from good judgment than any such decision. If the competitor lies, all the better, from a purely selfish standpoint, for the honest merchant.

The people, averaging the majority, can discriminate, and do. When they are given satisfaction by an honest advertiser they cannot be lured away from him by a dishonest one.—Commercial Bulletin.

CIDER vs. PICKLING VINEGAR.

John H. Brown, a well known chemist, of Atchison, Kas., writes :

"We once heard a famous housekeeper say that she always used pure cider vinegar for pickling and to find out when it was just right for pouring over the pickles, she dropped an egg into it, but could not remember whether it would sink or swim. Cider vinegar is not suitable for pickling because of its dark color and uncertain acid strength, unless it is first put through a vinegar generator, as the cause that changes it from apple juice will continue to change it, until its acid is exhausted. Good housekeepers use cider vinegar because their mothers did, and use it without any knowledge of how strong it is, or any thought as to whether cucumbers require it stronger or weaker than onions. Vegetables probably keep in cider because they are prepared in advance, by the addition of alum, spices or cooking. There is no question but that vinegar made by distillation from sound, selected corn is cleaner, more healthful and better adapted for pickling than vinegar made from wormy, rotten, rejected apples. Good cooks who have always used cider vinegar, have never investigated the matter, but large packers of pickles have found by experience and enormous expense that white distilled vinegar is the kind to use for pickling, and accurate hydrometers and testers are used to determine the proper strength necessary for different vegetables, as they have to guarantee their pickles to keep in any climate, and for all time. We do not doubt that many housekeepers have put up pickles and kept them for years, and received many compliments on them, but it would surprise them how much better they would have tasted if they had used pure white distilled vinegar that tested 42, as required by the national pure food law."—Trade.

KEEP UP STEAM.

The difference between success and failure, between getting business and not getting business, is not always so much in the quality of the effort put forth, as in the amount. In other words, the effort which gets business frequently differs from that which does not get business, more in degree than it does in kind. Men who do things and are heard from accordingly, seem to do their work a great deal like other men who never are heard from. The difference is that they are a little more intense, they hold out a little longer, and when the other fellow stops, thinking that the case is hopeless, they make another big effort and win what they are after.

It takes a lot of fuel and heat to bring water to the boiling point. It takes just about as much fuel and heat to raise the temperature of the water to 210 degrees Fahrenheit, but if you take away the fire when you have reached 210 degrees the water will never boil.

Moral—Add a little more fuel and keep the fire going.—Leadership.

CANADIAN GROCERY STORES—Interior J. G. Desjardin's Store, St. Denis Street, Montreal.

Some Matters of Mutual Interest

An incident occurred the other day which illustrates the way The Grocer has been appreciated by many of its subscribers during its twenty-one years of publication. Wm. Binnie, who has conducted a grocery store at 467 Adelaide Street West, Toronto, for many years, came into the office recently to tell us he had sold his business and was leaving for California, where he will reside henceforth. Incidentally, Mr. Binnie mentioned that he has never missed a copy of The Grocer during its twenty-one years of publication. He is one of the first and oldest subscribers and has shown his appreciation of the paper by continuing his subscription regularly during this lengthy period. This is surely an evidence of the paper's continued value, as are also a number of subscriptions on our lists of a similar nature.

Whenever a subscriber discontinues his paper the circulation department of the MacLean Publishing Co. ascertains the cause. As a result of this investigation it has been learned that out of every dozen that discontinues eleven do so because they have gone out of business. This is remarkable and shows the high appreciation in which MacLean's trade papers are held by their readers. The aim of the MacLean Publishing Co. is to make each issue of their numerous trade newspapers and magazines better than the preceding one and the results, as shown above, encourage to still greater effort.

It naturally follows that newspapers that can hold their subscribers so firmly must be good mediums for the advertiser. The best results are obtained from advertising when the advertisement is continuously being forced, issue after issue, upon the attention of the same readers. It is the constant seeing of an advertisement that makes the deepest impression upon a buyer, just as the more a man sees a pretty girl the deeper he falls in love with her.

One of the newer departments of the MacLean Co., and one which is becoming exceedingly busy, has been arranged with a view to helping advertisers by designing and writing their advertisements. If an advertiser does not wish to bother writing his ads. or feels that more striking work might be done by advertising specialists, he is perfectly at liberty to make use of this department. Advertisements will be prepared for him regularly, according to instructions and ideas furnished from time to time. Besides several expert ad. writers, the staff of the department includes an artist with wide experience in commercial designing, and the work turned out is being received with a great deal of favor.

A copy of the Special Spring Number was sent by one of our subscribers to a friend in Tampa, Florida. What was thought of the number in that city is shown in the following letter, which came to our Guelph friend some time ago :

"It was with no small degree of interest and pleasure that I perused the pages of the special May number of The Canadian Grocer. I had just returned from an extended trip through the Southern States and upon my arrival home "The Grocer" was among the first of the many things that claimed my attention.

"I was interested in the cover design, which shows the representatives of the various nations clamoring for Canada's products, but I was particularly struck with the fact that "Uncle Sam" was the only one who carried the bag, or in other words had the cash with him with which to discount his bill.

"I showed the special number to the two leading grocers of this city, and they were very much pleased with the matter which it contained and the manner in which it was arranged. One of them said that it surpassed anything of kind that he had seen. I asked him to write me an extended opinion of 'The Grocer,' but he refused to do the literary work, not being accustomed to writing news articles. He said, however, 'If you want to have my opinion, you can write the publishers, let them put my firm's name on their mailing list, send me a bill for a year's subscription, and I will mail them a cheque for the amount.' The firm's name is F. W. Ball Grocery Co., Tampa, Florida. I consider that the best endorsement a man can give of anything is to put some of his money into it.

"I am sure that the grocer who desires to enlarge his trade must keep in touch with the most up-to-date ways of doing so, and in my opinion he cannot do better than use from 'The Grocer' the many helpful suggestions it contains. The illustration showing the 'tasty' manner in which goods can be displayed is always an attractive and helpful feature of any publication, especially so of one which displays that which appeals to the gastronomic desires of the inner man. A great many grocers are yet in the kindergarten and need object lessons to show them how a thing is done and what it will look like, and for the grocer who is up-to-date in his methods they act as a stimulus to spur him on to improve and excel what the illustration reveals to him."

Here's another letter, this one from an old subscriber in the west, who has done well and become a prominent figure in his chosen town, which speaks good words for The Grocer, as well as for another of the MacLean Company's papers :

"Replying to your favor of the 1st, during the fifteen years in which I was actually engaged in the retail business here, after coming to Portage la Prairie, I considered 'The Canadian Grocer' and 'The Dry Goods Review' among the most valuable publications that we received, and always looked forward to the weekly numbers with the greatest interest. The information furnished was a distinct help in the conduct of our business, and I certainly think that every retailer in Canada should be a subscriber.

"Yours truly,

"The Mayor of the City of Portage la Prairie."

Johnson's Back Room

A STORY FOR GROCERS TELLING HOW ONE MAN MADE GOOD BY USING COMMON SENSE AND NEW METHODS.

The girl pulled in her horse and glanced sharply at the lad sprawled across the fence rails.

"Dreamin'?" she inquired. He laughed and nodded sheepishly. Then he shambled down into the road and leaned against her cart wheel.

"You're always dreamin'," she went on reproachfully.

He stretched his arms. The spring was in his blood. The April sun shone kindly on the girl in the buggy and lighted up the tints upon her face, the depths within her eyes.

"I'm through my work," he answered, "and I got a right to dream. I never dream till I'm through. There's another reason why I've got a right to dream * * * It's because I'm always dreamin' about you. I'm goin' to marry you some day."

The girl laughed boisterously. "No you're not, Bob Johnson," she replied; "when I marry, it's got to be a man who works, and not a man who dreams."

"Gee whiz!" he complained, "and don't I work? Say, has your old man ever had as good a man to help him since he started in to farm?"

The girl's face softened. "My old man," she repeated gently. Then she tapped her gloved hand with the whipstock sharply. "Oh!" she exclaimed, "I've got to get these opinions out of me. Bob Johnson," she added, "there's nobody loves my old man like I love him. But I want to let you into a secret, Bob." She lowered her voice. "I love my father, Bob, but I never can admire him. He ain't a success. He's a failure. Bob, a failure."

Robert Johnson—or "Bob," as the girl and the town familiarly knew him—opened wide his eyes. He did not speak, for the girl did not give him time. "My old man gets poorer every year. He ain't got an ounce of spunk in him. I love him—but look at my mother, Bob. They tell me she had me beat all hollow for good looks in her day. Look at her now. Thin, shriveled, without an idea in her head. That's my father and my mother, Bob. I love 'em, but they're just like all the rest of the fathers and mothers about here. Do you think I'm going to marry a man who'll turn out like my father? Do you think I'm goin' to slump into nothingness like my mother? Not much!"

"It's money you're lookin' for," protested Bob.

"No!" returned the girl hotly, "no! What I'm lookin' for is a man with success in him—with fightin' blood in him. I don't care whether he gets rich or not. I want him to have push, and snap and struggle in him. I can admire him then," she sighed. "And I'm beginnin' to think, Bob," she went on, "that I can't love a man well enough to marry him unless I can admire him."

She snickered gently. "Those are my sentiments, Bob, and I had to let 'em out on you."

Bob Johnson blinked his eyes. "Polly," he returned sadly, "you can have any man you want around here. I guess you know that yourself. But there's no such man as you've described—not around these diggin's, I can tell you."

She tossed her head. "Now, Bob," she exclaimed, "you keep to yourself what I'm sayin' to you. There's one man that comes pretty near to bein' a success—Hy Simpson."

"Hyler Simpson, the grocer?"

The girl nodded. "I'm goin' down there now," she said, "to get some flour and risin' powder. It ain't a question of whether I like him or whether I don't, Bob, he's a comin' man."

"Why," protested the boy, "why his father left him that there business. It was all made for him——"

"Makes no difference," she replied, "he's kept his end up, and they tell me he clears fifteen hundred every year. Fifteen hundred—cash. Ready money, understand."

Bob understood. Ready money—it was the shrine at which the farmers worshipped.

"Hyler Simpson's no man for you, Polly," he returned.

She smiled. "I didn't say he was, Bob," she answered, as she drove on. Bob stood and watched her, wondering.

"Maybe, after all," he told himself, "she's givin' me a hint."

Bob did not sleep that night. He did not even go to bed. He sat up in his bedroom staring out at the tree tops waving in the moonlight, and thought—thought hard. He thought specifically about every chance in town.

"I got fifty-three dollars in the bank" he said to himself, "I could go down to New York and——"

Well, Bob Johnson did not go down to New York. He went down to Hyler Simpson's and determinedly interviewed Hy.

"If you come at two-fifty a week, Bob," he said at last, "which is fifty cents less than I'm payin' my clerk now, and you board at my mother's, I'll take you in. Otherwise——"

Bob Johnson took the job. He had figured it all out the night before. And he had known somehow that this was his only chance for business, for ready money, for success. It was a beginning, at any rate.

"Polly'd laugh," Bob assured himself, "me gettin' less than what her old man paid me, and takin' a job under Hy."

"What's the trouble with business, Hy?" Bob queried after a week had passed.

Hy knew. He pointed a long, lean forefinger down toward the trolley station, a quarter of a mile away. "I'm off the line o' travel, Bob," he said "Every mother's son of 'em goes down to the trolley past the grocery store—Borchert's."

"That's queer," said Bob, "he's a new man, Borchert."

"He's cut in under me, somehow," said Hy.

Bob Johnson sniffed.

"Do you advertise enough, Hy?" he ventured.

Simpson laughed a raucous laugh. "There ain't a fence rail 'tween here and Donaldson that ain't got my name on it, hardly," he said, "and as for the County Chronicle, look at that."

Johnson looked at the County Chronicle ad. It did look all right. It looked enterprising and up to date.

"Pretty good ad, eh?" queried Simpson. Bob nodded his head.

"Simpson's name on every fence rail, and his ad in the Chronicle all the time. And yet——" Bob had read somewhere that if a man—a plumber, say—were mentioned (merely mentioned) in the prominent part of a newspaper every day for five years, his fortune would be made. It had not come to pass in Simpson's case.

"It's the tide of travel since that trolley came that's got us goin'," Simpson told Johnson.

"Well," said Bob, "it's just as well we've got a little leisure time. I've got to get to work."

"What you goin' to do?" queried his boss.

"Clean up the store a bit," said Bob.

"Well," returned the boss, "it don't need it. But go ahead. You might as well earn your salary, you know."

Johnson threw open a door that led into darkness. "What's this here room, Hyler?" he inquired. Hyler waved his hand.

"Less you have to do with that room the better, Bob," said the grocer, "that's dead stock. Old stuff. Won't sell."

"I'll take a look at it anyway, I guess," said Bob.

It was the night after Bob had explored the darkest recesses of that back-room cave—that very night that he saw the exhibition in the drug store on the corner. He was not the only man that saw it, nor woman, either. The store was crowded.

"What is it, anyhow?" the crowd inquired. Bob elbowed his way into the middle of the store and tapped Polly Anderson on the arm.

"What's goin' on?" he asked.

"Can't you see for yourself?" she answered, "it's a demonstration."

"Tooth powder?" he queried.

"Oh, no," she answered, "it's a correspondence school."

Bob plunged on into the front ranks. A young chap was explaining things. The crowd knew about correspondence schools. There were four men right there in town taking courses, and those four men had talked about it. But this, as Bob told himself, was the real goods. He drank it all in with his ears and his eyes. Not that he wanted any of it, but it was so interesting that he couldn't tear himself away. "You don't say so," he found himself exclaiming, when the young chap told the crowd that the school had nineteen pupils in one little speck of a town way off in India, and hundreds more even in the wilds of Africa. "Gee!"

He waited till the crowd thinned out. The young chap at the counter smiled and nodded to Bob. "See anything you like?" he queried. Johnson shook his head. "I'm a grocer's clerk," he answered. The chap swung upon him sharply and caught him by the arm.

"There are your specialties, right there," he said. Bob glanced vaguely at the list. "Which ones," he asked.

"Advertising," replied the demonstrator, "that—and Window Trimming. See!"

Bob smiled. "What do you folks know about advertising?" he asked doubtfully. The demonstrator smiled. "We drew the crowd to-night, didn't we, boy?" he answered, "and if you think we don't know anything about advertising and window dressing, just watch our window in this drug store for about a week—we'll be here a week—and see how many people stop and read. And come around at the end of the week and I'll tell you how many people have joined us just because we know how to advertise our own business. They won't regret it, either, because it's a blamed good business to be advertised."

Bob smiled and sauntered on. He had been the last man in the store, and it was close to eleven o'clock at night. "I got sixty dollars in the bank," he told himself. At the end of the week he walked into the drug store for the fourteenth time.

"Done any business?" he inquired. The man showed him a list. "Know any of these names?" he queried, "I got permission to show this list as often as I like." Bob whistled. "Jerusalem!" he returned, "say! you sure do know how to advertise. Say, let me see that list. No, he ain't there. I was lookin' for a man named Simpson. An' I was looking for the name o' Borchert. But they ain't there. So, naturally, gotto—I just gotto—say," he went on, thrusting his hand into his trousers pocket, "give me a line on what this costs. An' let me have a pen."

It was a month later, one night, that Hyler Simpson stepped into the big parlor at Peter Anderson's.

"Miss Polly in?" he queried. He sighed as he asked it. For Hyler had expected long ago, to ask Miss Polly to become Mrs. Polly Simpson. But he had put it off, and put it off—he was down on his luck. Business was growing worse each day, and Borchert was robbing him steadily of his customers.

"Is Miss Polly in?" he asked again. Yes, Polly was in, and she burst into the room from the sitting room, her face wreathed in smiles. She did more. She laughed.

"Well, we got your postal card," she said. And she burst into a laugh again.

"My postal card?" he queried.

"Yes," she answered, "your postal card—to mother."

He shook his head vaguely. "Haven't the slightest idea," he answered. She ran back into the sitting room and returned with a postal in her hand. This is what it said:

"Dear Madam. In our back room—old stock—we have seventeen wooden pails, originally priced at 30c. Nobody would have them at that price—wanted galvanized iron instead. They are old, but watertight, and we want to get them out of stock. We will sell them to-morrow for seven cents apiece. You can sometimes use a wooden pail where you can't a metal one—making cider vinegar, etc. Come and get a pail for seven cents and help us out. Yours, Simpson's."

The postal was written in pen and ink—neatly, carefully done. Simpson read and re-read it. Then his face flushed.

"It's that idiot, Johnson!" he exclaimed, "what did he do it for?" He did not know that that idiot, Johnson, was standing just outside the window, trying to see who was inside, trying to see whether he would have a clear field to call on Polly. Bob was no eavesdropper, but when he heard his name he listened through the shutters.

"Blamed idiot," cried Simpson.

The girl laughed and laughed again. "I should think he was," she answered, "to send out a postal card like that."

Polly Anderson's mother thrust her head into the parlor. "I'll tell you what, though, Mr. Simpson," she said, "I need a wooden pail, and I'll be down there in the morning to get one of those seventeen. Again the girl laughed, and again Simpson frowned and flushed. Hang it, what had Bob Johnson done it for? There was no point to it. It was trivial, foolish. And Simpson was a business man. He was not a child.

When he went home that night he found that Bob Johnson had gone to bed. "Blamed idiot," he growled, "what did you do it for?"

Bob rubbed his eyes. He smiled sleepily. "I wanted to clear out that old back room."

"They'll bring in a dollar-nineteen, and they cost over two dollars and a quarter just to buy. But that ain't it. They're old and they won't sell anyhow. The point is that you made me a laughing stock."

"Who laughed?" asked Bob. He knew.

"Well," returned Simpson, "the Anderson's—they laughed."

"But," protested Johnson, "you told 'em I did it, didn't you? Well, then, the laugh's on me, not you."

"Yes," answered Simpson, "you bet I told 'em you did it."

"Thanks," returned Johnson.

"For what?"

"For tellin' her—for tellin' them I did it and not you."

Bob Johnson turned over and slept the sleep of the just. Next morning Simpson wormed his way through the little crowd of customers in his store.

"I want one of them pails," said the first woman.

Simpson held up his hands. "Those pails," he groaned.

"And I want one of 'em, too," said another woman.

The pails were sold out inside of an hour and a half, and Simpson was glad of it. But still the farmers' wives came on.

"Thought I'd ride over and get one of them pails you wrote to me about," they said.

"Say," Simpson turned on Johnson, "how many of those blamed postals did you send out, anyhow?"

Bob Johnson grinned. "Just one for every cent that was comin' in on the pails. Just one hundred and nineteen cards."

"You'll ruin me, you idiot," said Simpson. But when things slackened up at noon, he turned again to Johnson. "Had a good business this morning," he exclaimed, adding up his sales, "sold about thirty-one dollars of real stuff today."

Johnson looked at him blankly, for an instant. "I kind o' thought you would," was all he had to say.

That night he took one of his postal cards and placed it over against Simpson's ad in the County Chronicle.

"You blamed blundering Simpson" he said, shaking his fist, "and I thought that was a crackerjack ad before I knew —before they taught me how." He settled down with. a book on his knee "We'll pass on now to lesson No. 12," he told himself. Well, the next time, he resurrected twenty-one reed push brooms—just like the brooms the "White Wings" use upon the streets of the Borough of Manhattan. "They're dead as a doornail," he told his customers, "they wouldn't sell. Best thing in the world to clean up stables and the like, and you know it, too. But—you wouldn't take 'em at a dollar, so you've got to take 'em at 29c apiece. Come and get 'em right away. H. Simpson."

The day the push brooms sold, the farmers stocked up on shirts and boots. The hat trade did well, too.

"And while you're about it chuck in another bag of feed," a man would say. Bob Johnson never let a man get away with a push broom, and nothing but a push broom—never. At the end of a week Bob Johnson touched his boss on the arm.

"I figure that we cleaned up about sixty dollars on those push brooms," he commented.

"We did on the other stock," said Simpson.

"No, on the brooms," persisted Johnson.

Simpson didn't answer. He was beginning to understand—but he could not see exactly how Johnson was pulling the wires, nor where the motive power came from.

"Next thing," said Bob, "we'll sell out the whole back room—all the dead stuff, in a lump. We'll auction it off, if we can't do better. But we'll get rid of it, anyhow. See if we don't."

"Then what?" queried Simpson.

Bob Johnson cast a critical eye about the shelves. "Then," he decided, "we'll dump the whole store into the back room. Most of it's dead as a doornail, anyway. Watch out."

Bob Johnson did a dastardly trick—he killed the Simpson ad in the County Chronicle. He cut it out—side-tracked it, and put another in its place. And this new one read about like this:

"Simpson's Big Back Room Sale. Do you know what our back room is? We told you what it was when you bought our old wooden pails and our old push brooms. It's our cemetery. It's where we put our Dead Stuff—stuff we've tried to sell and can't. We want you to sell it for us, to yourselves. You can have it at your own price, if you don't like ours. It's as old as the hills, but most of it's good. And we'll make a bargain with you, You can never tell anything about a thing until you've had it in the house for a day and a night. If you buy at this sale anything you don't like, bring it back within a week, used or unused, and wel'll take it back for cash. We're not going to tell you everything we've got in that back room. You must see the junk for yourself. But here's just a little bit that we can recommend: 51 Old-Fashioned Pillow Shams at 2c apiece; 16 silver-plated Butter Knives, vintage of 1895, at 7c; 5 Zinc Door Mats, rough on the shoes, but fine for the hired man at the back door, at 3c; 223 Neckties, for married man over forty (who don't care), for 3c."

Simpson was ready for them when they came. And they came all right. They found the back-room junk and pawed and haggled over it for a week. But they found something else at the store—something that had not been there before—a brand new stock of goods of every kind, good stuff, New York stuff, mostly seconds, which was the kind they could afford to buy; found fresh, new, cheap crackers, olives, delicatessen.

When the week was over, Simpson clapped Johnson on the back. "We took in—well, hundreds, this week, boy," he admitted. "Of course," he mused, "this can't last forever, but it was all to the good as far as it went. Say, Bob," he conceded, "those ads of yours are the blamedest, queerest, outlandish kind o' things—fact is, I'm ashamed of 'em. But they kind o' do the biz."

"Haw, haw," laughed Bob, pushing him across the floor, "why, they're nothin'. I'm just beginnin'. One o' these days I'll know somethin' about advertisin'. Don't you forget it. I'm just practisin' on you."

"What in thunder are you tryin' to do there," queried Simpson "with that framework? Why don't you leave it alone?"

Bob Johnson had been prying and jerking at the window frame of the big front window. He stopped for an instant. "I asked you to put plate-glass windows in here, Hyler," he said, "and you wouldn't do it. I'm goin' to unscrew these window frames now, and fix this window up to suit myself."

The windows in Simpson's store, and the window spaces, had had their uses from time immemorial. In one window was the proprietor's desk—in the left-hand front window—a big ugly piece of work, blotched and scratched and stained with ink. That and a lot of dusty billheads, and newspapers and old boots. The other front window gave room to the safe. And on top of the safe was a wagon wheel, some old harness, and a broken coffee-grinder. Bob Johnson moved the safe and the desk to the back window. And he took out bodily the window frames, for the window panes were small ones and begrimed with paint and dust. He made the frames portable, and provided them with bolts. He took them down every morning, and put them up every night. Inside of each window he built a platform and on the platform he built a pyramid—a new one every week. So that the public passing by could see the goods.

"Nothin' is goin' in these here windows but five-cent and ten-cent goods. The American public'll buy anything it sees, if it looks good and if it costs only ten cents. And these look good, all right.

He was right. Everything looked good, from the shredded codfish to the dainty little boxes of vanilla wafers. People driving past stopped and investigated. Automobile parties were irresistibly attracted.

"Oh, let's stop and get some of those," a fair occupant would say.

"That's a pretty fair dodge of yours, Bob," his boss admitted, "it seems to go. The public seems to like it."

"Pshaw," exclaimed Johnson, "I don't know window trimmin' from a hole in the ground. I'm only just beginnin'. But say, Hyler, I do wish you'd get those plate-glass windows. There's so blamed much dust and stuff. This business ain't all looks, you understand."

"Well," returned Simpson, good naturedly, "I'll get 'em. Hanged if I don't." And he put in the order then and there.

Johnson pushed over the County Chronicle and laughed. "Borchert is gettin' worked up an' worried, Hy," he said.

Simpson took the paper, and looked at Borchert's ad, and laughed. "Borchert's Big Bargain Back-Room Sale," was what it said.

"He's a plagiarist," said Simpson.

"Yes, and he's about a month too late."

That night Hyler Simpson called at Polly Anderson's. He felt now that the psychological moment had arrived. Business had come his way and was likely to stay his way.

"Polly," he said, "I—want you. I'm not comin' to you a beggar. There's my bank balance in the First National Bank. And I've made good this year, way beyond the last. I'm a growin' man, a comin' man. I like you and I love you. And I want you to love me and be my wife."

Polly smiled gently and shook her head. "No, Hy," she answered, "I can't do it. You're a good man and you'll make somebody a good husband. But I can't do it. You're not the kind of man I want. I want to marry a man who's got, well—success—runnin' in his veins."

"Success!" yelled Simpson; "is there a man in the county that's doin' better than I am? Look at the figures. They don't lie."

She laughed. "It isn't the money, Hy," she answered. You're not the man I want. The man I want must have it in him, success, whether he's rich, or whether he's poor. I don't care, if he's got what I'm lookin' for—I don't care whether he's a millionaire, or whether he—whether he gets only two and a half a week and board."

Two years later Robert Johnson—or "Bob" Johnson, as the town knew him—sat down and wrote a long letter to the correspondence schools. "I want advice," he said, "I'm getting up an ad, and I enclose a copy just as I have set it up. I'm not sure that it is good. I want you to look it over and I want you to help me to fix it up in the best kind of style. I am shaky because it is about a new arrangement, and a big one. Please let me know as soon as possible what you think. Gratefully, Robert Johnson. P.S.—You see by the ad that the name of the new concern is the Johnson, Simpson & Borchert Company. Is the name O.K.? P.P.S.—You needn't hurry that criticism. I'm just going on my wedding trip, and I'll be back in just two weeks.

Polly Johnson leaned back against the seat in the parlor car. "It's a funny thing, Bob," she said, "you made a hit at the grocery business, and yet you told me once you thought you'd take up advertising. It's a funny thing you never did."

"Advertising," returned Bob. "Say, I've been in it ever since that day out on the road three years and more ago. Do you remember that day, Polly?"

"Yes," smiled Polly, "and I said that to you then because I knew you had it in you all the time. You were the man I meant, Bob."

"Only," added Bob, "we won't have to live in two rooms on a back alley, Polly girl, though I know you'd willingly do so."—Clothier and Haberdasher.

The Man on the Rig

HINTS FOR THE GROCER'S DELIVERY SYSTEM, BY LAURISTON OF EKILDNA.

That the rig, its appearance and its management, constitutes one of the best—or worst—advertisements a grocer can have, is undeniable. And, in making the rig a good or a bad advertisement, as the case may be, the Man on the Rig is a most important factor.

One reason lies in the fact that the driver is very frequently placed in complete charge of the rig, and of the horse as well. He is responsible for their care and appearance. If he does not actually do all the cleaning himself, the cleaning is pretty generally done under his supervision and direction; and the praise or blame for the manner in which it is done may safely be laid at his door.

There are, roughly speaking, two classes of drivers: the drivers who care and the drivers who don't care. If you see a rig—particularly an elderly and otherwise decrepit rig—looking spick and span, you may rest assured that the man on that rig is pure gold. And if you see a brand new rig bespattered with mud and looking as though it had gone through the War of 1812—well, the moral is obvious.

Must Learn His City.

Quick deliveries are an essential in the grocery business. Very few grocers in towns and small cities have as yet adopted a fixed system of deliveries to all parts of the town at regular hours during the day. In most cases the delivery system, so called, is very flexible and emergency calls are frequent. Where there are fixed hours of delivery and fixed routes, from neither of which the merchant deviates, the rapidity and accuracy with which the delivery man covers his ground is an important feature; but rapidity and accuracy are yet more important where the system is one of the hit and miss variety.

It is not essential that the man on the rig know his city at the outset, though it is always advisable; but it is most emphatically essential that he be willing and able to learn it. He must learn and remember streets and numbers, and must know in every case the most direct route to be pursued in reaching a given destination, or the approved manner in which to combine a series of destinations into a single route so as to make the shortest possible trip.

Not Speed, But Directness.

Though it may seem a paradox, yet in securing rapid deliveries, actual speed is of little value. It is not the driver who sends his horse sweating and tearing down the city streets at a by-law breaking pace, who does the most effective day's work. The public dislike the furious driver who just misses running over them at the street corners. The grocer's patrons waste no love on the man who smashes their high-priced eggs into an omelette which they did not order. Ten to one, this kind of driver, when he does reach the place which he has had in mind, will find it is the wrong place. Ten to one he will retrace his course half a dozen times to make the deliveries which a man of forethought could have made in a single trip.

The man of forethought has all mapped out beforehand the places to which he is going, the order in which he will make his deliveries, and the probable time he will take. Even when a half-dozen extra packages are slammed into his rig as he is on the point of starting his methodical mind can, with scarcely a jar, adjust those extra deliveries into his pre-arranged route.

"How to Deliver."

Having learned how to reach his customer, the delivery man should pay a little more than passing attention to the art of "how to deliver." True, the sale itself has been long since made and the goods are usually paid for by the time they come within the driver's sphere of action. But, if the past sale is unaffected by the driver's way of doing things, that way counts a great deal in its effect upon future sales. It is the man on the rig who leaves the final impression upon the purchaser; and final impressions are often the most lasting.

Furthermore, if the man on the rig does not use tact for his employers' sake, he should certainly use it for his own. The man on the rig may be the man in the store, some day. The acquaintances he makes while on the rig will help him; and the habits he forms while on the rig will do much to make or mar his business career. A habit of courtesy is a good thing. It hits the mark every time.

Courtesy and Tact.

Hence, it is not sufficient in making a delivery, to just knock at the doo say, "Here's your groceries," dump them down as quickly as possible, and depart. A polite greeting, an exhibition of some interest in the welfare of the groceries, and a willingness to go a little out of your way now and then to help the housewife stow them away —these things count up quite a bit, in the long run, though they may seem trivial at the moment.

In cases of doubt, the query, "Is this where Smith's live?" may seem commendably direct; but, "Good morning. In this where Mr. Smith lives?" may nevertheless jar less upon the housewife's soul.

Tact is just as essential on a delivery rig as in the store; just as essential in delivering the goods as in making the original sale. The wise grocer is building for the future in this regard; and his helpers will, if they are wise realize that his success is theirs, and will do their best to help him build.

Tact seems born in some people. I have known young boys on their first rig to make a pronounced hit; I have known old drivers to "fall down" lamentably. But, though it may seem inborn, it can in all be self-taught; tactlessness is, at worst—or best—merely the fruit of the trees of carelessness.

Things to Avoid.

If the man on the rig is wise, he will use his horses well. A handsome and well kept horse is a good advertisement. No experienced driver will maltreat a horse; from a purely selfish point of view he knows better. There are times when the whip is needful; but the less it is used, the more effective does it become when finally called into requisition.

Many youths just graduated from the window-washer stage to the driver's seat, revel in the figure they cut when they race through the streets with whip flying. If they could only glimpse the inner thoughts of the passer-by, they would read something like this:

"Isn't it a fright, the way Jackson let's that man of his whip that poor old horse?"

There is a lot of sympathy latent in the public breast for the downtrodden delivery horse. Though people want their goods to arrive on time, they, with rare inconsistency, bellow loudly if the decrepit and slow moving steed is stirred into life with the whip. The driver's carelessness in this respect often antagonizes would-be and actual customers.

Furious driving has the same effect. With a furious driver, accidents are always liable to happen; and the running over of a school child, even where the grocer escapes a damage suit, even where the child receives no more than a scare, nevertheless hurts business—such a powerful thing is public sympathy.

Business is Business.

And, above all, the driver should realize that his time is his employer's. It is better to keep in motion all the time than to dawdle half the day with the expectation of making up for it by covering the street at breack-neck speed during the other half.

I remember one lad on a rig. He was about seventeen at the time, and we all used to wonder how it came about that Browns, who lived right next door to us, came to buy so many things from Mr. Grocer Jones that the rig had to appear there every day and had to stay sufficiently long to unload a ton of foodstuffs. But present sharp eyes discerned the fact that old Brown's girl and the youthful driver were in close communion at the front gate every day. And so things went on and on and on through many moons, and the twain, the world forgetting but not by the world forgot, lovey-dovey and goo-gooed, afternoon after afternoon, for hours and hours and hours.

That was several years ago. The young man has outgrown his folly, but not without paying the penalty. He is married to the Brown girl and has a family now. Moreover, he is still on the rig —and the only wonder I ever heard expressed was, that Grocer Jones had the patience to keep him there.

GET READY FOR THE HOLIDAY SEASON.

Have you begun yet to make preparations for the busy holiday season? If statements received from many retail merchants are authentic, the average man who handles holiday lines, cleaned up his stock in pretty good shape last year and there will be a good demand for this class of goods during the season of 1908.

Catering to holiday buyers is a matter which is deserving of a great deal of careful thought and planning and should not be left until the time arrives. when the actual goods are needed. Many retailers have already anticipated their requirements for the coming busy period, but others have been holding back with a view to waiting to see how business opens up during the late fall and early winter. This is a mistake. It is almost impossible to overlook the fact that this year is going to be a good one as far as holiday sales are concerned and the merchant who is alive to his opportunities, should without further delay, prepare himself for the season which is rapidly approaching.

ENCOURAGE THE CLERKS.

"The clerks will be as a rule what their employers make them," said a well-known grocer to the Inland Grocer. We keep an account here with every salesman to show the sales made by him, and another account showing what department of the trade he has given most assistance to. It works out well, encouraging competition among the clerks and among the departments.

"On Monday, when not much is doing, we have special sales, the object of which is to familiarize our customers with special lines of goods. One week we had a special sale of woodenware, including clotheslines, washboards, tubs, brooms and brushes. Every assistant was expected to call the attention of the customers to the woodenware department.

"The order clerk on his route and delivery clerk on his rounds were encouraged to talk woodenware, and the sales the first day we tried it were astonishing. A very large percentage of customers who would not have thought of their need of something in that line, on its being suggested to them would think of some item of which they wre in need and give us an order. We kept a record of sales made and gave each assistant credit for his work.

"In a subsequent week we had a sale of farinaceous goods—beans, rice, hominy, grits, cornmeal and so on. They sold in increased volume.

"The next week we tried Callforn'a canned fruits. For this we opened a few cans and gave customers visiting the store a chance to see and taste them. We took orders for them by the dozen, instead of by the can, as had been the rule.

"We showed, on another Monday, canned vegetables—little string beans the size of a toothpick and just the thing for garnishing; petits pois and Maine corn—giving many people an idea, as many of them never before had, of the variety and delicacy of dozens of items obtainable in cans.

"It was the best advertising we ever did and put the clerks on their mettle. The found that they could develop sales in any line if they once made the effort, and, knowing that we were crediting them with every sale, they made the effort.

"We never let a week pass nowadays, unless it is the holiday week, without a Monday sale, and we are training up the best lot of clerks we ever had.

"The thing to do is to let the clerks know what the goods are and to pass the iaformation along to consumers. Both need to be informed, and there is no suggestion as good as the personal word."

Some Facts About the Peanut

Rapidly Increasing in Importance as a Commercial Product—How They are Prepared for the Trade.

Mighty few grocery stores but have a box of peanuts stowed away somewhere. The number, too, who are keeping a roaster at the door for transient sales is rapidly increasing. Everybody likes peanuts, but very little is known about them. The following article, then, for which, with the engravings we are indebted to the Spice Mill, of New York, will be of general interest.

FACTS ABOUT THE PEANUT—Cluster of Spanish Peanut Vines.

While the peanut had been cultivated in the United States to a limited extent for a long time, it is only since 1866 that the crop has become of primary importance to the eastern section of Virginia, which seems peculiarly adapted to its production. Between 1865 and 1870 the rapid culture of the peanut was phenomenal, due probably to the knowledge of them acquired by the individual members of the various armies which at one time or another occupied the eastern section of Virginia. Each year doubled and at times increased threefold its crop over that of the preceding year, so that this country, from being a large importer of West African nuts, was soon able to supply the domestic demand with the home-raised article.

Suffolk, in eastern Virginia, can boast of the largest peanut market in the world. There are located there about numerous peanut factories, to say nothing of the many warehouses of this nature. These factories, which are large brick structures, range from two to five storeys high, with thousands of feet of floor space, some being run entirely by electricity. Many hands are given employment the year round, the labor used being mostly colored. These peanuts are shipped to foreign countries, and there is hardly a cargo leaving the ports of this country that does not carry a big supply of peanuts.

Varieties of Peanuts.

Of the varieties of peanuts the following may be mentioned:

The Bunch peanut having large, fine pods. This is a popular nut with the buyers, always commanding a good price everywhere. It is prolific and the nuts grow all in a cluster, hence are picked by hand with greater facility than other varieties.

Flat or Running peanut, a large podded nut that is the staple and standard variety in Virginia and most States. At least seven-tenths of the entire annual output is of this kind. There are several varieties of the Flat nut, some of them having very small pods, which are not popular with the buyers nor profitable for the growers.

The Spanish nut is the smallest peanut of all. It is mild and savory, and, for eating, raw or cooked, it is the best nut of all. It is employed largely in the manufacture of candies, and it holds a place all alone in commercial circles that no other peanut can so well fill. The Spanish nut is grown almost exclusively in some districts, and the models of cultivating and harvesting are coming to be a distinct and separate branch of peanut culture.

Jumbo Running Variety of peanut is becoming a favorite where extra large nuts are desired. This variety is twice the size of the regular Virginia Running or Flat variety.

There is the Smooth-Podded Flat nut with a pod about one-half the size of the parent variety. Then there are two varieties in Tennessee known as the White and the Red. The White closely resembles the Virginia Running variety, and the Red, with somewhat similar pods, produces kernels of a dark red skin.

The North Carolina, or African variety, which is grown in the eastern part of North Carolina, has pods similar to the Virginia variety, but the kernels contain more oil than the other varieties.

The Georgia Red, as it is sometimes called, is similar to the Red nut of Tennessee.

How Peanuts Are Prepared for the Trade.

Peanut cleaning and shelling is now one of the most important industries in Virginia. There are about twenty-five of these re-cleaning plants in this State, representing a capital of several millions of dollars.

The nuts, as marketed by the farmers, contain considerable quantity of dirt, vines, sticks, broken nuts and the like, and in the case of the Virginia peanut the first step in these re-cleaning plants is to remove this foreign matter. Most of the factories are five storeys high. The goods are elevated to the top floor, where they are graded according to quality, and dumped into large bins or hoppers. From these bins they pass through large cylindrical rollers, which remove the dirt and serve to polish the nuts; thence through a series of fans, which blow out the sticks, vines and trash, and the worthless hulls which contain no kernels. The goods then pass to the next floor, and after more fanning, which takes out the moderately light nuts, they pass over tables with endless belts, where negro women remove the dark and discolored nuts and the broken and cracked shells. This grade, which is known at Fancy Hand-Picked, drops to the lower floor, where it is put up in properly branded bags.

and made into grades known as No. 1 and No. 2 Virginia Shelled. The largest nuts from the Fancy Hand-Picked grade are screened before the goods are finally bagged, and go to make up what is known as the Jumbo grade of Fancy Hand-Picked, while the No. 1 Virginia Shelled are similarly treated, and the largest of these nuts graded as Extra Large Virginia Shelled.

The Spanish peanuts are cleaned by the same process as the Virginia nuts, only less care is given them, as these goods are shelled and the color of the hull kernels are sound. of the kernels are split. These split nuts are screened from the whole kernels, and the unshelled nuts are picked by hand and go through the shellers the second or third time, or until they are shelled.

FACTS ABOUT THE PEANUT—Vines Shocked in the Field.

Valuable Food Products.

It has been shown that peanuts contain an average of 29 per cent of protein, 49 per cent. of fat and 14 per cent. of carbo-hydrates in the dry material, and take a high rank and are classed with such concentrated foods as soja beans, cotton seed, etc.

The vines are shown to be superior to clover hay. The food value of the hay is higher the greater the percentage of nuts left on the vine in harvesting. The hulls possess considerable value as a feedstuff.

FACTS ABOUT THE PEANUT—Flat or running Virginia Peanuts (exact size).

FACTS ABOUT THE PEANUT—Improved Spanish Peanuts (exact size).

The moderately light peanuts, which have been blown out, and the discolored nuts, which are picked out, are run into extra or second-grade of hand-picked, while the still lighter nuts are shelled

The shelling is done with a revolving drum in a semi-circular bed or grating, while the hulls are removed by a system of fans. Some of the smaller peanuts do not shell, while on the other hand many

The Grocer of the Old Country

HOW THE RETAIL STORES IN GREAT BRITAIN DIFFER FROM OURS.—BY MAC. J. RAY.

The first thing you observe about the grocery stores after landing in Liverpool is the height to which the outside displays and window trims are built up. In contrast with this country, where the people hurry so that it only pays to specialize in one, or at least a few things in a window, a big variety would hardly be observed. Over there they start a window at the bottom and dress it with everything they carry, clean to the ceiling. Customers seem to have more time and perhaps make their decision as to what to buy from the window before going in.

Of course, most grocery stores in England do not carry fruit or fish. These are handled separately, and a store with a big window trim would have little or no outside display. But any grocer could learn a lot by observing one of these fruit or fish store's outside displays.

How They Handle Fish.

In handling fish, especially, they have us beaten. They wouldn't think of sending a fish out in the rough state we sell it. After you buy your fish, they have two or three men who do nothing but clean, scale and prepare the fish all ready for the pan. Then their window will probably consist of a sloping marble bottom, on which are displayed most temptingly the different varieties, all on chopped ice. They have hooks running up the sides of the window and along the top, and a big halibut will be hung on each, so that it looks as if a chain of fish enclosed the window.

Utilizing Space.

In the grocery stores every inch of space is utilized—even the ceiling. It is apt to be hung with fancy baskets.

Store Fronts in Belfast.

Suppose you come with me into Belfast and take a jaunting car ride about the city about 7 a.m. The stores are just opening up and you will be astonished to see what appears to be a solid store front of metal rise like a theatre curtain, and disappear. Riots and street rows are common in Ireland, and stores with expensive plate glass windows protect them at night with a heavy iron curtain made like an old-fashioned slat blind.

Window Display Not General.

But it is only in the cities that the Old Country merchant believes in window dressing. In the country, except among a few of the more up-to-date, they believe window dressing is a waste of time, and the window, beyond the sign, is left bare, or is used as a waste box for any old rubbish. The writer won a bet by dressing a window for an Irishman in a little town—the bet being that the window couldn't sell one pound's ($5) worth of goods in a week. The shopman has changed his opinion and now religiously changes his window.

Working Under Difficulties.

The grocer of the Old Country is up against a hard proposition. There are co-operative stores everywhere—and chains of stores operated by big companies. These advertise and undersell special lines—and the poor, ordinary fellow doesn't get as good a living as his brother over here.

Taken altogether, I don't think I'd advise any Canadian grocer to go to the Old Country to make his future, unless he wants to organize a chain of stores on a big scale.

THE VALUE OF TACT.

Almost any kind of business has a lot little things connected with its successful operation that are to be done and left undone. Each in itself amounts to little. But collectively they seem to mark the difference between a well-ordered establishment and a go-as-you-please house. One of these little things, often overlooked by both proprietor and clerk, is tact. There are many little things included in tact, but one of especial importance is that of addressing a customer by name.

"Good morning, Mrs. Bronson," says the tactful clerk. "What would you like to-day ?"

There is no attempt at familiarity in this. It is just plain every-day civility.

Perhaps this is only the second visit Mrs. Bronson has made to the store. She may order the goods she purchases sent to the house, and when she asks the clerk to take her address he politely informs her that he knows her number.

Mrs. Bronson does not go into an analysis of all this, still she cannot help but wonder how the clerk knew her name and address so well. She feels flattered. She must be of some particular consequence in the neighborhood, and she is surprised to find she is so well known.

This is a pleasant feeling to Mrs. Bronson, for she is like the rest of the human family, always well pleased at anything which tends to prove she is not a nonentity or an obscure person. She gets a favorable impression of the clerk and the store.

Public men have long understood the value of being able to address men whom they meet by their names, and many of them have cultivated this quality until it became simply marvelous the number of men they could call by name. The professional politician cultivates this quality until he is able in some instances to call by name every man in his particular district.

The really good salesman never says, "Good morning, sir," to one of his customers. It is "Good morning, Mr. Jones," and then he supplements this with some other purely personal allusion.

The clerk, as well as the proprietor of a retail grocery store should know the name and address of every householder in the neighborhood. A list of these should be kept and studied. It is profitable to cultivate this kind of business tact.—Retailer's Journal.

CLEAN COUNTERS.

One of the first things an apprentice should learn is to keep his counter clean. Not merely to dust it and polish it early in the morning, but to constantly keep an eye on every speck of dirt and dust that may arise during the day. It should be clean and clear of obstructions ; parcels should not accumulate, and goods had out for display ought to be removed quickly, and that almost at the moment a customer leaves the counter, it should be clean and bright, ready for the next buyer. One of the rules prevailing in a drapery establishment is that the assistant should clear away goods shown before the customer leaves, oftentimes keeping a client waiting while he attempts the double duty of packing a parcel and clearing the counter. Method may be carried to an extreme, for it is obvious that any delay in completing the work of serving a customer causes annoyance. Counters, however, should be cleared as quickly as possible. Further, the modern practice of using a portion of the counter for the display of goods, curtailing the space for serving, is to be deprecated. It is quite possible to have a number of sundry articles ready at hand to show customers, to tempt them to buy if possible, without obstructing the counter by superfluous litter. This tendency to crowd too many articles on the counter requires checking—The Storekeeper.

Loafers, Outside and In

A QUESTIONABLE FEATURE OF SOME STORES—ADVICE IN ELIMINATING THEM—BY J. W. PORTER.

In fancy I still see him, unkempt and dirty, loafing with his fellows beneath the decrepit porch of Jacey Creation's general store at Talbotville. Talbotville, 20 years ago, was a small place but even there the loafer loafed in all his glory, just as he and his class have loafed since corner grocery stores first were. Though it was in quiet Talbotville that I first beheld the loafer, I have found him in every town or city where I have resided since then. He seems omnipresent, He is the corner grocer's bete noir.

Now, a good many grocers don't like the loafer. His society is odious to them, and all the more odious from the fact that he seems to think he has a divine right to adorn the exterior of premises with his nprepossessing presence. They would be glad to rid themselves of him. "But," say they, in extenuation of their failure to do so, "if we drive these people away, we will lose their custom." That statement is generally accepted as conclusive, and finishes the remonstrance which the passer-by his just lodged against being compelled to wade through three inches of tobacco spit.

But, suppose the grocer does lose the custom of the hanger-on? What then? Is it a good proposition, from a purely business point of view, to compel the loafer to graze elsewhere?

His Delightful Ways.

In the first place, it is very rarely that the habitual hanger-on buys anything. This is a sad but substantial fact. Two reasons are behind it. The first reason is that he hasn't the wherewithal; the second is, that he doesn't have to buy.

The majority of these outside loafers are boys, more or less overgrown—boys who have outgrown the manlier pursuits of swimming, fighting and playing hookey, and rather than earn a living, settle down to loaf. They buy nothing because they do not work; and, if a man work not, neither shall he eat—unless he steal. These "men" steal. They "snag" the tomatoes and cucumbers which the grocer has artistically grouped in baskets on the edge of the sidewalk; they pelt one another and objectionable passers-by with his potatoes; they demolish and secrete his watermelons when he isn't looking; on the pretense of "tendin' store" while he is away, they eat his confectionery and deplete his till. When not so vigorously employed, they sit in the shadow of the decrepit porch in front of the store which has from time immorial protected their kind from the ravages of sun and rain, chew tobacco and smoke cigarettes swiped from the grocer's show case, spit upon the sidewaalk and ogle any ladies who may be passing by.

Is Out of Date.

The grocer who tolerates this nuisance about his store is out of date. The custom he would lose by driving the loafers away doesn't amount to a hill of beans. It is as nothing compared with the custom he stands to gain by making his business premises respectable, eradicating the tobacco-spit trade mark from the front of his store, and protecting from gratuitous insult the passers-by, among whom he must secure the larger portion of his customers.

It is an incontrovertible fact, borne out by the police everywhere, that such hangers-on are at the bottom of a vast majority of the petty burglaries to which small towns are every now and then subject. This fact should prompt merchants of all classes to united action, especially where the merchants individually concerned is unable or hesitates to remedy the nuisance himself.

Dynamite the Porch.

The first step should be the removal, by dynamite if necessary of that time-honored porch, which, through bygone ages, has protected the genius loafer from the elements. Robbed of this shelter, under which he seems to thrive as do mushrooms in warm, damp shade, the loafer may usually be counted on to seek fresh fields and pastures new.

On a certain side street in my town are three groceries,. One is crowded with loafers at all times; the two others have never known them. Oddly enough the one where the loafers congregate, is the one with the obsolete verandah. Significant, too, is the fact that the store with the verandah—and the loafers—has always done the poorest business.

Firmness is Needed.

But the porch is not entirely to blame. Much rests with the grocer himself. There are some business men to whom these barnacles would never dream of attaching themselves. There are others to whom they almost instinctively cling.

Though it is easier to start right than it is to switch to the right path after one has been following the wrong one for years, nevertheless, business demands that the loafer be eliminated. A little firmness will usually effect the desired result. It must be consistent firmness, however. The grocer cannot afford to be violent one day, and atone for his violence by holding forth the olive branch the next.

In an extreme contingency, the intervention of the police, provided they can be awakened for the purpose, will do good. But in the instance I have mentioned, the two stores which were free from loafers were kept so without the policeman's aid. The fault lies largely where the remedy must also lie, with the grocer himself.

The Loafer Within.

Harder, perhaps, to deal with than the outside loafer, is the loafer within. I refer to the personal friend. Friendship is a good thing, doubtless; but the grocer is, first and foremost, a business man. It is his business to supply the public with certain recognized commodities, and anything which interferes with that business should be frowned upon.

So that, when your warm friend forms the habit of dropping in every day or so and talking to you by the hour, don't encourage him too much. The compliment is obvious; but it is not valuable in the upbuilding of your business.

Pleasure should never be allowed to interfere with business during business hours; just as business should never be allowed to intrude into the hours set forth for recreation or rest.

A Little Gentle Discouragement.

Hence, when your friend drops in and commences to tell you funny stories at which he laughs before he finishes them and at which you do not laugh at all, when he chats of the day's glorious fishing he has had up the creek and expatiates upon the beauties of his new gasoline launch or the cleverness of his new son and heir—if, in the midst of it all a customer comes in, seize the opportunity to politely murmur, "Excuse me!"

I know a grocer who always breaks off his personal conversations that way whenever a customer comes in. Whether his clerks are busy or disengaged, he always greets the customer personally. whenever possible he takes her order himself. This is good business. First, it has a dampening effect upon the friend's ardor to waste the grocer's time. Second, the customer appreciates the compliment. The word goes round: "I like to deal with Grocer So-and-So. No matter how busy he is, he always stops to speak to me."

A More Objectionable Type.

Occasionally the inside loafer is of a more objectionable type. Not only does he consume your time in uninteresting conversation, but he makes your store his favorite "stamping ground." Here he meets his boon companions, when the party monopolize all the seats, and swap so-called "funny" stories. They usually smoke, they sometimes spit on the floor, then generally bear the aroma of booze upon their breath. The grocery, blessed with their presence, looks like a bar-room, just lacking the bar. While a case like this is exceptional, and rarely occurs where the proprietor himself is not of the same type, I have nevertheless known good businesses in other lines than groceries ruined by just such hangers on. It is scarcely necessary to point out that a practice of this kind must be nipped in the bud. The majority of the grocer's customers are housewives. The housewife is peculiarly sensitive on certain points; and the manner of store with which she deals is one of them. She will go further and pay more, rather than enter a store where there are two or three of these camp followers.

The grocer should never forget that business is business. The further he separates his business life from his private life the more successful he is bound to be. This is true with reference to his associates, as well as with reference to his handling of his business and private finances. From the mere point of view of money-making, it is good business to eliminate the loafer, whether inside or out. But the grocer's business is not mere money-making. He is concerned in supplying the needs of a vast army of people. Just as the commissariat department is the most important to the success of an invading army, so the grocery business is vital to the onward march of the world's work. In introducing honest goods at honest prices to an added army of workers, the grocer is doing good, not to himself alone, but likewise to them. And, in discouraging anything which stands in the way of the successful fulfilment of his mission, he is doing an integral part of his simple yet important duty.

THE REWARD OF VIRTUE.

People like to be talked to. The man who said "Silence is golden" may have been a good politician, but he was a poor salesman.

Even if your goods are gilt edged—the finest in this or any other planet—even if they ought to sell themselves, you will find it to your advantage to talk pleasantly with your public.

Your goods may possess all the four virtues, but these virtues will become apparent, more definite and concrete, if they are crystalized into expression and find expression in words.

Virtue that is not advertised has to be its own reward.—Curtis Publishing Company.

The Grocer's Man Outside

THE ADVANTAGES AND DISADVANTAGES OF ORDER TAKING

In the town or small city, the retail grocer's "man outside" is often an important functionary.

Many grocers make it a custom to send out men regularly, always once, often twice or more, each week, to call on favored customers and secure their orders. There is generally one such man attached to every leading store. He has his regular routes, and covers them usually during the mornings; in the afternoons, when business down town is brisk, he tends counter. Sometimes the head clerk is sent out; at other times the driver covers the city as part of his duties.

The "man outside" in no sense takes the place of newspaper advertising. He has little to do with the building up of new business. He does not go after it the way the wholesaler's traveler does. If enterprising, he makes the acquaintance of new residents and puts in a good word for his firm; but as for cutting into another grocer's territory, such a thing is contrary to professional etiquette and is usually frowned upon.

The Argument.

The argument, briefly, is this:

"During certain hours we have a quiet time in our store. If we have a staff equal to the exigencies of the busy hours, it is usually one or two men too large for the dull hours."

Hence, what more rational than to send out a man with a rig or on a bicycle, to make a tour of the firm's most favored customers and secure their orders. By so doing, the day's business is made to balance, and the surplus man is kept usefully employed. Furthermore, while incursions are rarely, if ever, made into a rival's territory, the regular visits of the order-taker help to keep the customer in touch with the firm, and to preserve the latter's territory intact.

The system has been in vogue for many years, and, that grocers carrying it on are satisfied with its workings is best shown by the fact that few, if any, have discontinued it.

Encourages Credit Business.

The order-taking system at the same time has one bad tendency. It discourages cash and encourages credit business. The man who solicits orders from house to house is in a certain measure asking a favor, and thereby placing himself in a false position. The public, queerly enough, argues upside-down in this regard. The argument runs thus:

"If I let you come to my house and take my order, I am doing you a favor, and you should reciprocate by not asking me to pay until I am ready. If, on the other hand, I come to your store and save you the trouble of sending for my order, you are perfectly free to insist that I pay cash."

Some of the resulting credits are pretty long. Grocers I know of have carried hundreds of dollars for such customers on their books. I know one account that probably during a period of twelve years was rarely, if ever, less than $100, and was sometimes double that amount. To be brief, the grocer sent a man to secure the order, delivered the goods, charged them at cash prices, and finally, made the purchaser a present of $100 in cash—for that is the amount which the interest on that long-standing loan would probably come to.

Must Know His Business.

To be of any use to his employer, the "man outside" must know his business. And yet, patent as this statement appears, it is not the rule by any means for him to know his business. Sometimes he doesn't have more than the faintest glimmer of knowledge.

The following is the substance of an actual conversation between a housewife and a prominent grocer's "man outside"—in this case the boy driving the delivery rig.

"How much are eggs to-day?"

"Dunno."

"Has Mr. S. any bananas in yet?"

"Dunno."

"How much is butter to-day?"

"Dunno," Then, with a sudden glimmer of intelligence, "I never bother to ask about them things."

This is the first type, the lowest strata, of "man outside." For all practical purposes, such an emissary might as well not be sent out at all. Housewives to-day are measurably educated in business methods. They have sold farm produce on the market, they have themselves clerked in stores or they worked in business offices. They want to know what they are getting, and how much they will have to pay for it. If the order man doesn't know, the housewife doesn't buy. That's all.

No—it is not all. Chances are, the housewife buys elsewhere.

Some Just Order-takers.

Next in rank comes the "man outside" who is "just an order-taker." He knocks at the door, says "Good morning, Mrs. Smith," asks if there is anything she wants to-day, writes it all down on his little pad, answers her questions specifically, and finally, with another "Good morning, ma'am," departs.

He has held his own. He is a pretty fair cog in the business wheel. At the appointed time he bobs up in precisely the same place as ever, does his work in the same way, and departs with the same satisfied smile.

The Man With Initiative.

Right at the top of the ladder is the man with initiative. He knows groceries from start to finish. Sometimes he has been in business in a small way himself, and has transferred from the corner grocery and independence to the store on the main street and a salary, in order that he may gain experience in the wider field. After he has jotted down the order, he commences a polite cross-examination.

"But, is there anything more?" he asks insinuatingly. "We have some nice strawberries just in—the first of the season," or, "I suppose you are going to the picnic on Thursday. We have some nice cooked ham, just the thing for sandwiches." And, after the ham is jotted down, he suggests half a dozen other things for the picnic, till the order has mounted up from 45 cents to $2.75.

It all comes of knowing what the store has to offer, and prices, and everything about the goods. The man with initiative seems always to think of the right thing at the right moment, and very often he manages to accomplish that most difficult of achievements, presenting it in the right way.

To graduate from the indifference of the lowest rank to the self-satisfaction of the middle rank is less difficult than to graduate from the self-satisfaction of the middle to the hustle at the top. The low rank man is guilty of a fault; the middle rank man has formed a habit. But either can reach the top class, with its promise of greater things, if there is any vestige of man in him at all.

Selling Goods "At Cost"

IS IT ADVISABLE TO ADVERTISE IN THIS WAY?—WHAT THE CUSTOMER USUALLY THINKS.

The great semi-annual blunder of advertising goods "at cost" is keeping its dates as usual, as shown by an examination of newspapers from all parts of the country. Not that it is always a mistake to sell at cost, or even below cost, for there are times not a few when just that course marks the long-headed, far-sighted merchant. But to advertise that you are selling at cost is a mistake, no matter how true it may be.

In the first place, the merchant who advertises to sell at cost, and really does sell at cost, gives away his profits in a double sense; he not only loses his profits (which may be just the thing to do) but he lets his customers know his percentage of profit on the articles so sold (which certainly is not just the thing to do).

If, for instance, a customer who priced article before the price was cut, responds to the "at cost" ad and prices it again, that customer knows what your regular profit has been on that particular thing. If it happens to be a thing on which the profit is large, he will immediately conclude that your other profits are in proportion, put you down for a robber and keep away from you except when you cut prices. If, on the other hand, it happens to be an article that is sold on a very close margin, he will just as quickly put you down for a liar and keep away from you all the time.

It is perfectly safe and entirely fair to say "at cost and below," then print the old and new prices without specifying which are "at" and which "below." And, by the way, it is also well within the truth to say "below cost," if the cost marked on your goods is the price at which you were billed by your jobber or manufacturer, for your real actual cost includes freight, cartage, clerk-hire, rent, heat, light and a lot of fixed charges that most merchants do not take into account in marking costs, though they may be figured into the margin for profit.

You say a "below cost" ad will not be believed. Indeed it will. Simply say, "Here are these refrigerators—brand new, this season's goods, every one of them, and they'll be just as good next summer as they are now. But I can't afford to keep them and if you'll take one of them off my hands now, I can well afford to give up all my profit and more, too.

"Why? I'll tell you.

"I have, say, $425 in these refrigerators. If I don't get it out of them now, they will lay in my store-rooms all winter and not make a cent for me. If I can get say $400 out of them now, I can put that money into some winter goods that will turn over before the first of December with a profit of say $35, and then I'll have the ready cash to put into something else that will sell and pay a profit before the refrigerator season comes around again. In fact, I might be able, by my quick sales and small profits method, to turn that money over three times, each time with a profit before I could sell these refrigerators. That's the secret of my success—spot cash buying and no dead stock—and that's why you can now buy "This Season's Best Makes of Refrigerators Below their Actual Cost to Me."

(Old and New Prices Here)

That isn't necessarily a model ad of its kind, but it's a line of argument that ought to convince people and sell goods. It's absolutely frank and aboveboard; the reasoning will hold water, the general policy would be approved by most good business men, and, not the least important, it takes your customer into your confidence in a way that will make him trust you, and, more than this, your methods.—Printer's Ink.

WELL TRAINED GROCERS.

If we want pure food, honest weight and generally satisfactory service from the grocer, we must not look to laws to give them, but must expect them only when the grocer is well trained, when he is made fit, for it is through ignorance that most of the faults in the grocer's service have been allowed to develop. It would probably pay the state to provide schools of instruction for all dealers in food products, using for the purpose the funds now wasted through the foods and dairy commissions, in the running down of petty violations of the law that endanger neither health nor pocket. There are very many grocers who need no instruction in their duties, but "there are others," and there are also assistants, the coming grocers, who are finding it harder and harder to learn the things that were the common heritage of all grocers' apprentices in the brave days of old, ere package goods were known.—Merchants' Review.

Practical Grocery Advertising

THE STATEMENT OF PRICE A MOST IMPORTANT FACTOR IN AD. WRITING—SOME ILLUSTRATIVE SPECIMENS.

In nine cases out of ten it is the price which decides the buyer. You may explain all the qualities of a certain article in the most interesting manner to a possible customer, but if you omit mention of the price, the inevitable inquiry of the customer is "Yes! But what's the price?"

It is not to be inferred, however, that because the price is usually the deciding factor in a sale that it is necessary to offer cut prices. Not by any means. The method of the most successful advertisers is to make the quality of the article justify its price.

Along this line a recent issue of "Printers' Ink" has this to say:

Play Up the Price.

"How does it happen that so many advertisers with eyes to see and brains to analyze persistently ignore one of the most compelling features of all advertising—the Price? The people, of all others, who are in best position to judge of the comparative pulling power of different kinds of advertising are the department stores. See how they play up the price. Much department store advertising is nothing more than a maze of prices. Yet how it pulls! We have heard some advertisers say: 'Advertising the price is all right for retail stores or cheap commodities but it would never do for me. I make the finest article of its kind in the market and my competitors are able to advertise much lower prices. Why, if I named my price it would scare away possible customers.'

"Don't you believe it. The price is vital. Suppose your price is higher—that is the best argument in the world that you have the best goods. If people would answer advertisements just to find out the price, then there would be some ground for this attitude. But they don't take that trouble. If the price isn't named, the natural inclination is to pass up the whole matter and go on to something more interesting.

"Another advantage of advertising the price is that it is the most direct way possible of saying: 'I want your order.' The way to get business is to ask for it. Talk, however clever, that doesn't lead right straight up to the buying thought is obstructive. There is a time and a place for "prestige advertising," but the trouble with too many campaigns is that they never get beyond the prestige point. Advertising that will "cash in" is needed to make prestige work profitable. Playing up the price never hurt any proposition that is on a sound, business-like basis."

In another place in the same issue of Printers' Ink the following illustrated comparison between a priced ad. and a non-priced ad. takes place:

An Illustrated Comparison.

"Which of these two advertisements is most likely to do the business? They appear side by side in the papers and emanate from houses in the same line of business.

"One ad. travels all around the lot and then winds up by telling you that 'present prices are greatly reduced.' What does that mean? How does it interest me? What am I supposed to do about it anyhow?

"The other ad. tells about certain kinds of shoes that are on the bargain table to-day at $2.95. Here's something definite—a proposition that must either be accepted or rejected.

"Which of these two competitive advertisers is getting the most out of his space, and which is likely to be most pleased with the results of his advertising?"

A Good Specimen From Calgary.

The points brought out in the above discussion are pretty well brought out in the ad. reproduced herewith of S. G. Freeze, of Calgary, which appeared recently in the Albertan. This is a fine business-like piece of work and the ad.-writer has gotten right down to business and the talking of values and quoting prices without wasting a word. Some authorities would criticize the omission of an introduction but for the nature of the ad.—offerings for one day—this seems unnecessary. The closing line at the bottom of the prices, viz., "The above prices are for cash only and the goods are guaranteed to be first-class" could not well be better put, though a question might be aroused as to what the "guarantee" covered. This line, too, tells a good deal about the store's business methods and ought to have a mighty good impression on the housewives who read it. The ad. is well arranged and well balanced and the compositor who put it together ought to have Mr. Freeze's thanks.

Some Criticism.

Another business-like ad. is that of H. Morrow, but it lacks the good appearance and legibility of the Freeze ad., although both ads. are just about the same size. It is a fact that legibility counts a whole lot in advertising. The easier an ad. is to read the more people will read it. There is room for considerable improvement in the set-up of the Morrow ad. In the first place, no good purpose seems to have been served by setting the last two words of the headline (viz: "In Groceries") in a larger size of type than the other part of the sentence. The whole sentence would be much more catchy had the smaller size type been used. No improvement can be suggested for the next sentence. The itemized section of the ad. would be more readable and infinitely neater in appearance if set up after the style of the Freeze ad. The division into three columns makes paragraphs which have shorter lines and more depth, thus adding immensely to its legibility.

A small ad., including a brief talk on tea, submitted by Harry Ranahan, London, is well-planned and nicely put together, but the space used was scarcely large enough to make the talk as convincing as it might have been.

DON'T ABUSE SUPERLATIVES.

Do not show peevishness or irritation with your rivals in an advertisement. For no one cares to know about an advertiser's griefs or feelings, as each person addressed has enough of his own. Ill-temper is never inviting, and one who finds it on the newspaper page will suspect its appearance at the advertiser's place of business.

Do not say that your store is the "only reliable place" in which to procure a certain line of goods. Either in a large city or a small village this statement can hardly be true, and if it were true it will seem to everyone who reads the statement incredible. Some of the most persuasive advertisements written are those which make thoroughly modest claims. Avowals that win belief, even if they are not magnificent, are vastly more effective than those which are too magnificently expressed. With the single exception of those who run shows and circuses, it is well for advertisers to be shy in the exploitation of superlatives. The public, for some reason, however, expects and tolerates a flambuoyant method for public exhibitions and would be disappointed if it were lacking when the heralds thereof arrive. It seems to be in fact a part of the show and which with the street procession, is given free.

Do not fail to consider the constituency you wish to address, but do not forget that there are some fish that can be caught in any stream. While the magazine printed for a girls' school would not be an ideal medium for a store that sells men's ready to wear clothes, it will still be true that almost everyone of its 700 or a thousand copies goes into the homes of the well to do where there are men. If a brief, inexpensive advertisement secures one pleased customer through any medium it will not have been placed in vain.

Do not conclude suddenly, if no response comes from advertising within ten days or two weeks, that there has necessarily been some blunder made which should be corrected. Lightning strikes, to be sure, soon after the flash, but there are some farm crops that it takes two years to harvest. The recoil from an advertisement, therefore, may be slow and yet sure.—Publisher and Retailer.

CHOOSING CATCH PHRASES.

The value of a good catch phrase in advertising is unquestioned, but it should be chosen with great care. To be of any value it should do more than attract attention—it should tell a story, concrete, compact and unforgetable.

One of the best examples we have ever had is the well-known phrase that helped to popularize amateur photography: "You press the button, we do the rest." Packed in this single, short sentence was the powerful suggestion that you could "take" all the pictures you desired, while the detail work of bringing out the finished product was not for you, if you wished to avoid it.

In contrast I give you an example of the folly of adopting a catch phrase just for the sake of having one. A furniture dealer in Boston, some years ago, used the expresion "when in doubt buy of ....." This is inapt, carrying as it does entirely the wrong suggestion. Our furniture friend was evidently a devotee of "Bridge," and his phrase was adapted from the well-known advice of Hoyle. It seems to me that if I had been a rival dealer I should have had something to say in my advertising to the effect, that: "There is no doubt in the minds of 10,000 pleased and satisfied customers that Andrews Furniture Co. is the best place to trade." A home furnishing company in Detroit, Mich., did better, I think, when it said: "You furnish the girl, we do the rest." But this could have been improved upon and imitation avoided by saying, in the latter portion of the phrase, "we furnish the home" —that being just the thing that ought to be emphasized. You see what a difference it makes how you put it. It is like the old joke of the man who said that he "fell notwithstanding." A or three damage suits saved to pay it. friend who tried to repeat the joke said that "he fell nevertheless."

When I was a boy railroad crossings bore a massive sign which read: "Railroad Crossing, Look Out for the Engine while the Bell Rings." But accidents were common, and finally one railroad management was wise enough to pay a man to produce something that would hit people quick and hard. This he did with the familiar sign: "Stop, Look, Listen." It is said that the writer received $6,000 for his work. It seems a large fee, but it would only take two

GET ACQUAINTED WITH COMPETITORS.

Have you paid that long-deferred visit to your competitor yet? It is time you did. Instead of listening to the tales brought by some customer that the fellow across the way is cutting prices, and following the lead without investigating, how much better it would be to go over and see for yourself that he is not as bad as painted, but that the customer is carrying stories just to get a few cents off regular price.

Probably the other dealer would be glad to come over to your store first, but he don't know just how you would take it, and he thinks you would suspect him of spying and trying to learn your secrets, how much stock you have on hand, and lots of other things that you would have no idea of accusing him of.

Go over and give your brother dealer a pleasant call. Go in the front door, and not armed through the rear. When your customers find that you are on friendly terms with the trade, they will cease trying to get price concessions; will pay their bills more promptly, and if there is one who wants to run an account in hopes of never paying it, he will hesitate to try it upon dealers who are friendly with one another.

Get acquainted with the other dealer the first opportunity you have. He'll appreciate your advances.—Eli Grocer.

Dispensing With Delivery

DISCUSSION AND SUGGESTION REGARDING A PROBLEM OF INTEREST TO EVERY GROCER.

A grocer in San Jose, California, is attempting to put into practice what thousands of grocers have always considered would be a good thing for the trade, but which they have decided was impossible of accomplishment, namely, the regulation of the delivery problem, so that only articles too large to handle would be delivered by the grocer.

In a circular letter which this merchant recently had published in his local paper, he says:

"The good public, as a rule, hardly realizes what a hardship and expense the delivery of groceries by grocers' wagons means to the man in business. While the free delivery of goods means much to many customers, it has its unfair points, and is not an equal privilege for all kinds of customers. For customers living in the city free delivery is a convenience more often overused than properly used. For the customers living outside of the city it is decidedly unfair; they cannot use the free delivery. This brings out one vital point: The town people should pay for delivery of goods, and the country people who handle their own goods would be ahead of this charge, which is surely due them.

"If the grocery people do not deliver goods the public would get about a 5 per cent. lower price on most goods.

"From city trade the grocer is troubled with small, in fact very small, orders, sometimes a cake of yeast to be delivered a mile; sometimes an order for 15 or 20 cents' worth of merchandise, such orders are unfair, and brings one to the point of making a minimum amount for delivery. Say orders for less than 50 cents' worth of goods will not be delivered. The amount is not large, and no larger than any housekeeper could make her order.

"Few ladies realize how much it costs to handle small orders. Some ladies don't send their order in until almost dinner or supper time, and, seemingly, they think their one order is the only order the store has to handle, as they expect it at once.

"The ordinary grocer makes four deliveries per day in well populated localities, and this immense amount of ground covered over and over again is hard on teams, wagons and men; although even this four-times-a-day delivery does not seem enough for some housewives; simply because they fail to give it the thought of getting together an order of any size, not because they don't care, but because they don't think over their wants.

"If delivery was to be charged for, and price of goods made correspondingly lower, the lady ordering four times a day would pay a minimum price of 10 cents per order, or 40 cents per day, or for a week $2.40. If she ordered only twice a week she would pay only 20 cents. This illustration is for lightweight groceries. For heavy goods, such as potatoes, grain, etc., charge would be as to weight—about 10 cents per hundred.

"Possibly if delivery was not made free it would be well to have a transfer company or an automobile service handle goods for the combined grocers.

"These deductions might not suit all grocers (that is, big and little grocers), but there is no argument that will down the facts that the free delivery of goods is a big expense, and one that is increasing; and one that is, sooner or later, going to be handled by a company organized for that purpose, where all buyers will get the same benefit, country buyers and city buyers alike, where the person carrying his own goods is allowed for this service, and all are charged a lower price for groceries than they are now paying.

"This argument may be a trifle ahead of time at the present moment, as to relation to not delivering groceries, but as to limiting the amount of purchase to say 50 cents' worth for free delivery, the time for consumers to consider such a fact is now. There is no merchant so overworked, so overtaxed, and no merchant asked to do so much free of charge as the groceryman.

"The buying public are the ones to give this article some thought, and they are the ones to lend their assistance to help the average grocer with some of these problems brought about by his aims to please the public in so many ways free of charge."

The above sounds first rate in print, and theoretically the idea is all right, but any man who has been in the grocery business long enough to understand the matter thoroughly, will admit that it will be a long time before the consuming public will accept and abide by the ideas outlined above. Co-operation amongst the merchants with the idea of centralizing and reducing the cost of that department to a minimum, is more practical and will command more careful consideration at the hands of the up-to-date retail merchant.—Trade.

More Dollars for the Grocer

BY D. DELOS BUTLER, BRANTFORD.

The following article, which gives a salesman's side of the question of soliciting orders will be read with interest by both grocers and clerks. Mr. Butler, whose photo appears herewith, is a clerk in Fred C. Harp's bright store in Brantford and has a few ideas of his own on grocers' problems. Incidentally, it might be mentioned that Mr. Butler won one of the prizes in The Grocer's last Christmas window-dressing contest.

Mr. Grocer! "Sit up and take notice." The taking of orders is more and more becoming one of the most important parts of the grocery business. How much business would you do through the week were it not for your orders?

Is there any room for improvement? That is the important question. What kind of a representative do you send to get the orders? Most grocers send the delivery boy or man. Some of these are bright, enterprising, exact and careful, yet with no knowledge of the stock or prices. Would you be content to allow the person you send for orders wait on those ladies if they come into your store or would you want a salesman, one who can sell?

If it is important to have a salesman in the store, it looks as if it were important to have a live salesman take the orders. He has not the goods to show, but if he knows his business and has the confidence of the customer, it means larger orders.

Did it ever occur to you that what profit is made on what the salesman sells over the regular order is clear gain? The same delivery, etc., does the work.

Most grocers have at least fifty places where they call for orders twice a week, a very modest number. A salesman could increase his orders, say, 25 cents on the average per order and this is not improbable figure out and see what you would gain in one year.

There is another good feature about sending a salesman. You can from time to time push off certain lines of goods that are going slowly. He also has an excellent chance to judge homes, his knowledge will be of help to you if you do a credit business. He can also be constantly on the lookout for more business, often a little prejudice may exist, a customer may become indifferent, a complaint in regard to the prices of other stores. These are little things but are important. A good salesman would be more capable of giving these their proper attention.

Mr. Grocer, was it not hard work to get customers? Now why not make them count for the very most? You must have an interest in seeing that the orders are properly filled, that the salesman may keep faith with the customers and that he misrepresents nothing for the sake of making a sale. An honest statement about any article that the salesman has confidence in, will be sure to make sales, especially if he studies his work and uses enthusiasm and earnestness.

The hard feature for the salesman is that the employer never knows when the order comes in, what is the size of the order or, as is often the case, the whole order depends on the salesman.

Clerks, be aggressive. Never let well enough alone. Would you like to be a good salesman? The best salesmen are not best by chance, but by training. Salesmanship is the important part of the grocery business and everything else depends on it.

RETAIL GROCER IS A POWER.

The retailer is commencing to realize that he is a power and that as the last man between manufacturer and consumer he exerts a powerful influence.

The manufacturer creates the demand, but if the retailer is unwilling to hand out the article with good will a large portion of the manufacturer's effort is wasted.

The wise advertiser knows that the retailer is a very necessary link in the chain of distribution, and without the good will of the retailer for a product it is hard sledding to get an article to the consumer.

The consumer still has faith in the retailer, and a good word from him assists materially in marketing a product easily.

A retailer may keep in stock an article to which he is unfriendly and can curtail its sale very materially. Under the counter is a bad place for the manufacturer to have his goods stored. — Grocers' Review.

AN UNIQUE GROCERY.

A grocer in Greater New York territory has recently opened up a store on entirely new lines. He sells only one brand of each article, at only one price. For instance, Star Milk is the only brand he carries in this line. A 9d coffee, one grade of peas, one brand of tomatoes, and so on through the whole list. All goods are sold for cash, and no deliveries are made. Notwithstanding this peculiar condition, to say the least, interesting venture, the store does a business of £120 per week, with only a manager and one boy. This seems almost incredible when the average grocer considers the amount of help he has to have to carry on a business doing this amount.—The Storekeeper.

The children who come into the store should receive just as careful attention as their parents. A good impression made on them is sure to be reported and will have a mighty beneficial effect.

Keep the sidewalks and crossings adjacent to your store clean and as far as possible dry. A clean and tidy crossing will alone often attract a good customer.

Effective Grocery Window Dressing

EXAMPLES OF ATTRACTIVE WINDOW DISPLAYS—SUGGESTIONS FOR OUT-OF-THE-ORDINARY WINDOWS.

Though it is only October, ideas of Christmas are already beginning to percolate through peoples' heads, and many are already buying their holiday gifts. It is always good business to plan ahead and if the Christmas window display can be planned beforehand, and other matters similarly arranged, a good deal of the rush of the busiest season may be eliminated. With a view to helping in this good work, a couple of Christmas window displays are presented in this issue. They are both practical, easily made up from goods that can be sold and are consequently inexpensive. Both windows shown, indeed, were sent in for The Grocer's window dressing contest last December. They are both applicable, as well, for use during the winter months, not necessarily only for Christmas.

WINDOW DRESSING—An Attractive Christmas Window from Pembroke.

A Window From Pembroke.

Engraving No. 1 is a reproduction of a display sent in by H. Jones, of Pembroke. With the photo he forwarded the following description of the window :

"On the floor from left to right was a tray of table raisins, fancy boxes of chocolates, Christmas pudding, glass bowl of candies, large bowl of pears, glass stand of fruit, three tins apples, cranberries, oranges, Christmas crackers, packages of muscatel raisins, centre bowl of dates, packages in pyramids of currants, seeded raisins, figs, Christmas crackers, bowl of russet apples, three tier glass stand of apples, peccan nuts, grapes, bowl of chocolate, pudding in can, bottles of figs, tray of shelled walnuts, fancy boxes of candy. The middle of window rising from floor shows a box of prunes, with pyramids of preserved fruits, pyramids of tins of toffee, pyramids of fruits, topped by glass bowl of grape fruit, tray of almonds. The back of window to the left, drums of Chinese figs, canned fruit with pineapple on top, umbrella boxes of figs, with pyramid of Chinese figs,; right side same as left. Suspended from the ceiling were chains of fancy paper with Japanese lantern and large crimson bells and seasonable mottoes, fancy fans and evergreen, which owing to heavy reflection do not show in photo. The floor of window was covered with ruby paper which made a good background for the fruit and candies.

Engraving No. 2 shows a window dressed by J. C. Ecklin for J. Blood, 419 Yonge Street, Toronto. A companion window to this, dressed by the same clerk, carried off first prize in last year's contest. This is a comparatively simple window and yet is attractive and striking. The window pretty nearly tells the story of how it was dressed itself. The floor, as may be seen, is covered with nuts of several kinds, figs, raisins and boxes of Christmas confectionery and fruits. Boxes of confectionery are also hung by strings from the top of the window. Against a background built in the rear of the window is built a wall of oranges, a striking feature, aad this is topped oft and trimmed at the sides with holly. A border of green stuff around the front of the window also helps in giving a holiday touch. The window could have been made a great deal more effective by the addition of a few price tickets.

A Unique Window From Walkerton.

Engraving No. 3 shows a unique window which is particularly seasonable at this time of the year, and is certainly something different from any idea we have heretofore seen presented, The window was dressed by Geo. Alardyce, clerk for Whitehead & Huether, Walkerton, who forwarded the following description with the photo :

WINDOW DRESSING—A Pleasing Window Dressed by a Toronto Clerk.

"The window includes a table set in the usual manner, with a good rug on the floor, with a small table in one corner of the window,- upon which is placed a few tins salmon, herring, corn syrup and jars of honey. Suspended from the ceiling by invisible wires are the following dishes : Vegetable dish, porridge bowl, butter dish, egg dish and milk pitcher, with neatly printed card attached to each, and a pair large goose wings firmly wired to each, showing them to have taken wings and gone beyond the consumer's reach. Pinned to the table cloth next the window are cards, which may be seen in the photo."

HANDLING FRUIT WINDOWS.

"One must be everlastingly 'on the job' if he wishes to prevent a fruit window looking ragged half the time," said a well-known window trimmer to the writer this week. He was about to close the store on a Saturday night. The window was bare in anticipation of early receipts the following Monday morning, except for bunches of bananas which hung in the usual fashion upon hooks suspended from the ceiling. Only a half-dozen or so of the fruit remained unsold on one of the stalks. The speaker removed the stalk from the hook and laid the remnant aside to be disposed of as 'seconds.'

"That is one of the first things I learned from my preceptor in this line," he went on. "Every night before closing I look over the banana display and leave on view only the full, good-looking bunches. Fag ends of a bunch do not attract trade. It is the same with any line of fruits. People do not care for the last orange of a lot, nor the last peach in a basket. When one sells from the stock on display, it is a good plan to keep the lot on sale filled up as long as stock and time permit. Buyers like to see their orders filled from an abundant lot of fresh-looking goods. When the stock in the window runs low, it is a good plan to take the remnant out, place in a basket or other container and offer it by itself. Fruit on display should never be allowed to take on the lonely old maid appearance. Same with vegetables."

The same authority discriminates between the use of different sorts of containers in displaying green goods. Small fruits in pony baskets and small boxes, he suggests, are best shown in those receptacles rather than in bulk, while the use of large bushel and half-bushel baskets and boxes gives the display a "woody" appearance, which detracts from the attractive appearance of the goods. Displays of fresh "ready-to-eat" goods are necessarily prepared quickly and have short shift of service, but we'd rather dispense with the baskets entirely when possible. If time permits, the effectiveness of the display would be enhanced by showing the goods in glass or china dishes, or even on big platters. Window experts are invited to try the effect of the two sorts of display. We'll wager that a composite group of fruit displayed on a fruit dish or platter will look so much better than the same line in a basket that customers will wish to buy dish and all—and dishes are profitable merchandise.

WINDOW DRESSING—An Out-of-the-Ordinary Display from Walkerton.

Some Novelty Windows

HOW THEY ARE MADE AND WHAT THEY HAVE DONE.

With a view to helping grocers to get away from the ordinary, in most cases a very desirable feature, in their window dressings, there are offered herewith a few suggestions of window displays which are sure to attract a good deal of attention, and at the same time are calculated to be helpful in making sales, which is, after all, the real thing to get at in window dressing.

NOVEL WINDOW DISPLAYS—Suggestion for a Kitchen Window.

A Kitchen Window.

The first display, numbered 1, is of a nature that will attract every housewife and child, and a good many of the men, too, who pass the store, and will set them talking about it at home. The sketch and suggestion appeared originally in the Grocery World. The only difficulty met in building this window will be in providing the wall to carry the shelving in the rear of the window. Some stores already have this in place, and in that case it only needs covering to represent the wall. Where this does not exist, a light framework covered with thick millboard can easily be arranged to fit the rear of the window. This covered framework should be preserved intact as it can be used over and over again for other windows.

It is surprising what a good kitchen display can be made with grocery goods. The stove, sink, table and all are made of cartons and cans. It's a hot stove, too. Inside the stove is an electric light with red tissue paper bunched up for it to shine through. Don't wrap the tissue paper around the lamp, though, and take a chance of fire. The tissue paper can be arranged around the light so that it will not touch the bulb at all.

The shelving is carefully covered with shelf paper of a delicate tone to harmonize well with the colors of cartons in the display. The goods are nicely arranged on the shelving to suggest a pantry. The sink is covered with cartons and some plates are placed on it.

The kitchen stove is a work of art. The stove pipe may be the real article, or cartons may be used, except for the elbow, where a genuine stove pipe elbow will answer best. A tea-kettle, a frying pan and other receptacles are setting on the stove. In the oven, which is open to view, a cake is baking.

Don't forget to have a broom somewhere in sight. Every good kitchen is well guarded against dirt. Then there is a chair and a table. On the table is a beautifully snow white cloth. A few articles and products, such as cartons, cans and bottle, are placed on the table.

A Window That Sold Butter.

The Grocery World tells of a window display which, with some activity and new methods, is said to have increased the butter sales of one store 500 per cent. How the result was accomplished, together with a description of the window that did the work, is given herewith. The story is told by the originator as follows :

"First we found a good creamery butter that could be depended upon. Next we contracted with the creamery company by the year, we furnishing the wrappers. The wrappers have a blue ribbon printed across one end with our name and the creamery's name. They do not cost much when buying in large quantities.

"We handle several grades of butter, each with a different colored ribbon on the wrapper. But we only push the sale of 'Blue Ribbon.' We next had souvenir postals printed and sent out to all of our customers.

"Before using this scheme we were selling about 50 pounds of butter a week, while now we average over 300 pounds a week.

"Here is a description of one of several window displays we used :

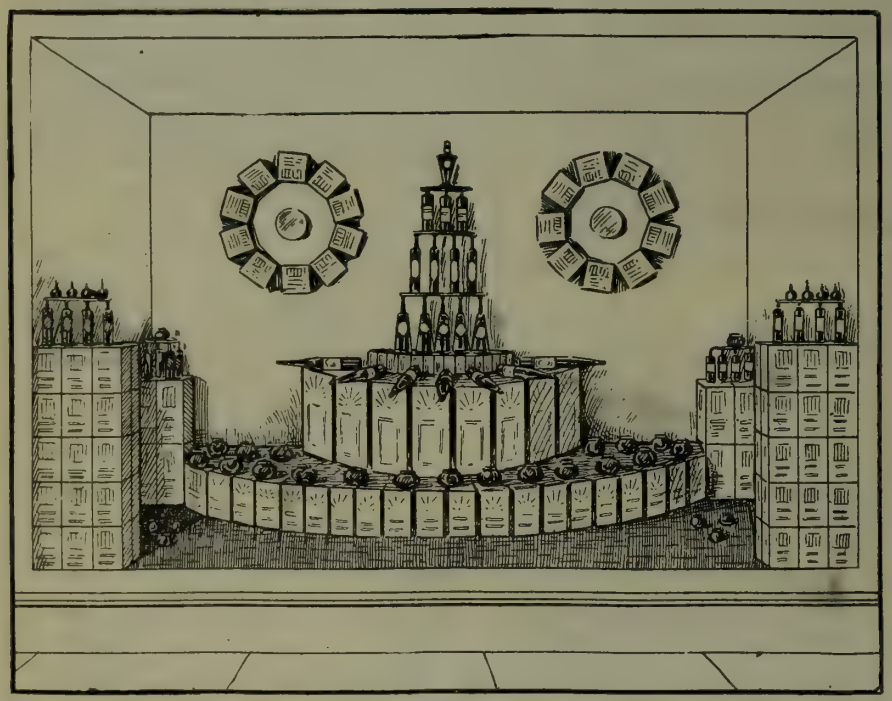
"The floor was covered with white paper; on this were laid out squares (12 inches wide) with 1-inch strips of blue crepe tissue paper. Within each square was placed a pound of butter.

"We did not use butter, but used blocks of wood cut from a yellow pine scantling the width and depth of a pound of butter. When these were wrapped with butter paper you could not tell them from butter.

"For a background we used 30-inch paper tacked on a frame the length of the window. On this was made an imitation of the label on the butter. The letters were, of course, painted on, but the ribbon was made of blue crepe tissue paper, glued on in spots.

"In the centre of the window was a 5x30-inch glass shelf suspended from the ceiling by stovepipe wire. In front of these wires were stretched tissue ribbons. On this shelf were placed a few pounds of butter (imitation) and in the centre was a silver butter dish on which was a half-pound of real butter."



NOVEL WINDOW DISPLAYS—An Effective Carton and Bottle Design.

AWindow of Cartons and Bottles.

The window illustrated in engraving No. 3 is of rather a more conservative type than either of the other two, but presents the features of being very quickly and easily arranged and at practically no expense. It is a design which may be utilized at some time when the window dresser is too busy to bother with a more troublesome arrangement. Little description is needed, as the window tells its own story. Bottles and cartons are used, the pyramid of bottles in the rear being supported by sections or triangles of plate glass. The cartons on the rear are empty and are tacked to the rear of the window. If the window is not closed in these, of course, may be omitted. The display can readily be adapted to any sized window.

A DISPLAY OF GREEN GOODS.

Cover the bottom of the window with plain white paper. On the right place a basket nicely filled with grapes. Secure some sprays of grape vine with nice green leaves, or get green paper and thin wire and make your leaves, which will last longer. Turn the basket on one side, partly over the leaves. On the other side place a basket of peaches, arranged in the same way with peach leaves. In the centre back place a pile of cantaloupes. Directly in front of these place a row of home canned peaches in a semi-circle, inside this a row of small jars cantaloupes spiced, and in front of these tumblers of different jellies and preserves made from peaches and grapes. In the centre of this semi-circle place a nice peach custard. Over this place a sign :—

GOOD THINGS FROM THESE

A "WHITE" GROCERY.

A certain grocer who for a long time cherished the idea of having a white grocery, finally decided to open one. In "The White Grocery," everything is in white, including furniture, horse and delivery wagon. Everything looks good to eat on the shelves. The grocer himself says of the experiment, "I did not buy the high-priced fixtures—let the other fellow do that—but I put on the white enamel, and they look very well. I find the white doesn't cost any more than the other, and brings better results. My business has been beyond my fondest expectations." The idea of a white grocery is a good one, as it not only suggests cleanliness, but is an aid to it by exposing dirt the minute it appears.

A SALES MAKING SCHEME.

William Haskel, a Minnesota grocer, tells an interesting little scheme that he utilizes for speeding up business at frequent intervals. He arranges for a free demonstration of goods by a cracker factory and a coffee house at his store about once a month. These concerns not only serve coffee and cookies, crackers, etc., free all day to customers, but also arrange for free entertainment by paying for the use of a piano and the services of a pianist.

"We, of course, advertise the event liberally," said Mr. Haskel, "both in our local papers and by circulars or hand bills. In distributing these circulars I always take my rig and a couple of boys and go about the town with them myself and see that a circular is placed inside the door of every house."

STORE WINDOW LIGHTING.

Arrangements of lights in display windows is a feature which is not always given due study. A glaring arc light in the centre of a window space may serve to light the way of the passerby, and a cluster of incandescents will often attract attention—to the lights.

Considering the window simply as an advertising proposition, designed to sell goods, however, the lamps should be made as inconspicuous as good light service permits.

Good results can be obtained by placing shades behind the globes when incandescants are used, concealing them from the view of the public and throwing the light itself upon the goods.

Big arc lights if used at all should be so placed as to avoid their blinding the eye to the display. This can be done by hanging them high in the window space, with a shade of dark material between the lamp and street. Globes of ground glass are preferable to tone the light. Colored globes are not approved by the many dealers, who reason that they diminish the attention attracted to the goods, and who claim that a clear white light is best for display. Still there are circumstances when colored lights might be desirable either temporarily or permanently as a means of causing the store to stand out more strongly in the midst of other brilliantly lighted stores, with an individuality all its own.

System in the Grocery Store

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS WHICH HAVE BEEN TESTED AND HAVE PROVED THEIR WORTH—BY MAC. J. RAY.

Do you have your work planned out fairly well for a week ahead, with every clerk knowing pretty much what is expected of him? or do you go down Monday with nothing definite fixed in your mind about the week's work, except to get things into shape somehow and sell all you can?

Systemless Hard Work.

I have known men to come down to the store on Monday morning in a great hurry and fuss—must get things into good shape early—expect an awful big week. They rush into the office, hang their hat on the rack, it falls down, angrily pick it up again, nearly rip the seam in taking the coat off, open the desk with a jerk, so sudden that the ink is upset on the already untidy contents, spend ten minutes mopping it up, everything including man is inky, temper terribly upset, feel mad at everything, out into the store, irritable and cross, noisily order the already nervous clerks in the effort to make up for lost time and hustle them so that they were not fit for or capable of good work. Work may be accomplished under such conditions, but it is at a fearful price and is not systematic money-making work.

Haste Not, Rest Not—Work.

Then there is the steady, cool, planning man who goes down to a big week's toil as quiet as if it were a slack time. He walks into his office, opens his desk, which, as usual, is in perfect order, and with no apparent effort wades through his big pile of work, the daily ads., his correspondence, buying, etc., and meanwhile the whole staff have already swung into their accustomed duties. One clerk who has charge of the cellar has started with a "junior" on the lark of cleaning up. Another clerk, the window dresser, has commenced to take out Saturday's trim, while the others wait on trade, dust and generally clean up. By noon in the regular routine, the cellar has been swept and thoroughly put to rights, the window "changed," and everything dusted and the store, looking fairly respectable, after its heavy Saturday's trade.

Individual Responsibility.

In the afternoon all hands spend an hour or so on their respective shelves. Every clerk has a set of shelving for which he is personally responsible as to dressing and filling with stock. The man who is responsible for the top flat goes up and straightens up and thoroughly sweeps in all corners and under tables. A weekly cleaning of cellar and attic is absolutely necessary, in fact, it is criminal to neglect it. Old rubbish, especially if there are any greasy rags in it, is apt to start spontaneous combustion, and an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. It is this very same carelessness, this tendency to let things that are not seen take care of themselves that leads to some of our worst disasters. The steamer "Slocum," in which so many hundreds of people were drowned and burned a few years ago, would never have been destroyed had her captain been a man thorough enough to have had the rubbish cleaned out of her holds. Half our fires are preventible.

"Weighing Up" Day.

Tuesday is set apart for a general weighing up day. Of course, as we all know, things "happen" around a grocery store so that no regime could be absolutely followed out, still, it's a good idea to have some sort of a chart to steer by. The big bins are filled with sugar, flour, oatmeal, etc., weighed into convenient sizes for retailing. Certain clerks are responsible for these bins. You must know that half the staff are on busy days "salesmen," and the others "order fillers." In a word, one set take the orders and the others put them up, and in this way a great deal more business can be accomplished. The "salesmen" are responsible for the teas, coffees, spices. Everything "weighable" is put up for the busy end of the week. By Wednesday, the first day there is usually much business doing, the stock is in good shape and the force ready for all the business that can show up.

Outside Displays.

Have you ever noticed a grocer's outside display that looked as if it had been "shovelled" out and left there. No doubt it was put out nicely in the morning, but it was no one's duty to occasionally slip out and with a few minutes' work set things right.

Systematic Advertising.

Change your ad. every morning. Make it your first duty, before your mail. Most afternoon papers accept ads. up to nine o'clock—and the morning is the time to write ads., when you are fresh and optimistic, and can make your words "tingle." Just write as if you were selling a certain article, only advertise one or two things, and be brief. Set a short, snappy headline and print your name big at the bottom. 50 or 100 lines is loads for most grocers. Above all, talk of seasonable things, hit the iron when it's hot. You've simply got to change your ad. every day if you want to get the "best there is" out of advertising.

Systematic Delivery.

If there is anything annoying in the grocery business it is a slow, inefficient delivery. If you have two or more drivers, make one "boss" and make him responsible for the sorting of routes and seeing that "wanted" orders are rushed. A little responsibility will make a man who has any of the spark of manhood respond nobly. Of course, if the drivers are going to deliver the goods quickly they must be put up at once, and that's where the order men come in. The salesman has to wait on customer after customer and has no opportunity to put up his orders. I know a man who lets his head driver hire the other drivers. He looks after his employer's goods as if they were his own.

Systematic Buying.

Most merchants prefer to do their own buying, but they would often find that they could get valuable suggestions from the head clerks, as they are more in touch with what the customers like. Your head clerk could order the biscuits from the firms you preferred and save you a lot of detail work in "sorting-up." Get a copy of every order, and make one clerk responsible to check off all goods from these copies as soon as received, as often a shipment will beat the invoice and be taken into stock without being marked.

Universal Courtesy.

Every first-class store has pretty much the same quality of goods and sells fairly reasonable, and the only big advantage you can give your customers is a little nicer treatment. Make them feel you appreciate their patronage. Make your clerks feel it is a privilege to do small favors for customers. It's the little things that count—the bright smile, the tact to say the right thing, the little thoughtfulnesses that make life a little brighter for some one else. In short, make your store a spot people will feel it is a pleasure to visit.

Try systematic store work. It will give you more time for thinking up new business schemes and being nice to people. Divide your work up. Make each and every man or boy in the place responsible for something. Make them feel you trust and depend on them for part of your business success. If they are composed of the right stuff, the kind of men it will pay you to keep, they will respond, and business will be a fresh delight each day, instead of the "weary grind" some men make it.

THE POINT OF CONTACT.

"The important thing for a clerk to find in dealing with a customer," said the old-time merchant, "is the point of contact. By that is meant the way to appeal to each individual customer to bring results; to make a sale."

This is getting down to the fine points of salesmanship. It requires skill, tact and experience.

The story is told of the young woman clerk at the ribbon counter who was dealing with a customer who didn't know exactly what she wanted. The clerk showed numerous ribbons, but the customer hesitated. Then the clerk picked up one bolt which seemed to be about what she wanted, quickly threw it into a handsome bow and held it up before the customer without saying a word.

"That looks nice," said the customer. "I guess I'll take that."

The clerk had found the point of contact. It didn't even require a single word. But it was just what the customer needed to help her make up her mind.

To illustrate the other side, where a clerk misses the mark, there is the story of the employer who had noticed that one of his clerks had "fallen down" with several customers.

"Watch me with the next customer and see how I make a sale," said the employer to the clerk.

The next customer was a lady who wanted a silk dress. The employer showed several satisfactory samples; the lady objected to the price.

"Madam," said the employer, "I will tell you, in confidence, that we can't sell any more silk at this price after this piece is gone. There has been an epidemic among the silk worms, and silk is scarce and will advance in price."

The woman bought the silk and the employer said to the clerk, who had been attentive to the performance, "Now you see how it's done."

Another lady customer entered, and the clerk, full of the new idea about the "point of contact," hastened to show her what she wanted. Suddenly the woman turned away and flounced out of the store.

"What was the matter?" asked the employer of the clerk.

"I can't imagine," replied the clerk. "I did exactly what you did. The woman wanted to buy tape, and I told her she had better buy quick, because there had been an epidemic among the tape worms and the price of tape would go up."

CULTIVATE YOUR MEMORY.

One of the prime qualifications of the successful tradesman is a good memory for names and faces. Nothing is more pleasing to customers than to have the proprietor or salesman remember them from a previous visit. This is something which every dealer or salesman should cultivate if he does not already possess the knack. Concentration of the attention through interest is the chief factor in remembering anything, so that if the interest is lacking it can be cultivated or enforced. If any difficulty is experienced a memo pad can be used for the name and a short description of the person and also the article purchased. A glance over this at the close of the day and at occasional intervals will refresh the recollections. One merchant used this as the basis of a mailing list, which he used with very good effect. This system of cultivating the memory might be less practicable in a store having a very large trade, but even then can be managed in many cases and will always prove a strong factor in attracting and holding trade.

Just recall your own experiences in this line and you will soon realize how uncomfortable it is to be greeted with the stony glance which signifies forgetfulness.

The Grocery of the Year 2,000

A SUGGESTIVE PEEP INTO THE FUTURE.

What will the grocery of the future be ?

A most interesting question surely, and one the discussion of which, while it cannot be altogether practicable, will perhaps suggest some ideas that may be made use of now.

Several factors will have a material influence on the development of the grocery store. To-day we are told that two at least of the sciences, chemistry and electricity, are in their infancy, and basing a judgment upon the progress of older sciences, we know that this opinion is correct. In addition to these it might be well to add bacteriology, which certainly in its marvellous advancement has eclipsed all others. Any contemplation of the future, then, must take into consideration, as a primary necessity, the part which each will play in the profession of selling foodstuffs.

More Attention to Chemistry.

Scientific investigators tell us there is no reason why man's life should not be prolonged to twice the Scriptural measure of three score and ten. This condition, though, will only arise from a more thorough knowledge of dietetics and sanitation, which, in short, is only the practice of common sense in modes of living. The reasons are obvious. To-day when a factory wishes to produce a perfect product care is taken that every machine through which the article passes is adjusted to perform its function perfectly. In this way and in no other, will the sum of these various operations result in the production of a perfect article. Likewise with our bodies, if each organ is not working properly, we cannot hope to obtain from our food the greatest benefit. To illustrate this we will consider, for instance, a meal which is hurriedly taken and not properly masticated. The active element of saliva, ptaylin, does not perform its duty on the starches, which should be changed to sugars through its agency, and the product is not ready for the action of the gastric juices of the stomach, each of which has some special action upon the mass. It will be observed that if each one of these juices is not permitted to carry out its work, complete assimilation of the food injected is rendered impossible.

The result of such practices is evident in the large army of dyspeptics, which America especially, yearly produces.

A Practical Application.

The above may seem irrelevant to this article, but its application will be indicated further. In all of the public schools of to-day, hygeine forms a part of the curriculum. The children of to-day will be the men and women of to-morrow, consequently the progressive tradesman will be the man to anticipate their requirements. In addition, some of the large manufacturers, even at the present moment, employ specialists to assist in devising more scientific methods of manufacture. In these indications we may observe the trend of development, so that if we were to take a Rip Van Winkle slumber, and suddenly be aroused in the year 2000 A.D., we would not be too much surprised in the transformation which had taken place in the corner grocery in the meantime.

The Store of 2000 A.D.

We will be struck by its wonderful window area, and on arriving close enough to make an examination we will find the whole store is constructed of concrete, having the color of brown stone (for by this time concrete will be made in all colors). The whole store will be one piece, as though it were carved from a single stone. Much to our astonishment, the doors as we approach them will open automatically, and remain ajar until we are within. The floor will be cement. If a level be laid upon it, it will be found to slant to one side. On the opposite side will be found water cocks which, by moving a lever, will regulate a stream of cold or hot water upon the floor, shelves, counters and seats will not in any way interfere with this flow of water, as each will be raised sufficiently clear of the floor. The windows, which will be floored with a cement closely resembling marble, will be fitted with the necessary arrangements to make a fine window display, but no wood will be noticed in this equipment, which will be nickel or some other metal.

The whole window will be completely shut off from the remainder of the store, and will be fitted with ammonia pipes to preserve a constant temperature, which will also collect the moisture and prevent any such trouble as frosted windows.

The most striking thing in the whole picture, perhaps, will be the standardization of fixtures and the products kept, both in size and quality. The telephone will be placed in the wall, flush with it, except the mouthpiece, which will project slightly. Beside the telephone will be found a keyboard with numbers running from 1 to 10, and by pressing any combination of these numbers the required number may be called through the agency of automatic exchanges.

Uniform Packages.

The shelves will be full, and there will be no lost space on them, as the manufacturers will make their packages according to a uniform size or the multiples of that size. For instance, we will assume the shelf is 12 inches deep, and three feet long. The packages will be six inches high, four inches wide, and two inches thick, taking for granted the shelf is six inches wide. On a shelf of this description we would be able to have three rows wide, and two rows high, consisting of nine packages in each row. Everything will be already in packages and scales, therefore, will be rendered obsolete. Foodstuffs will come very little in actual contact with human hands.

Butter, Cheese and Eggs.

Accurate cheese and butter-cutting and wrapping machines, operating under glass, will eliminate the necessity for th s. Many things which we buy now in bulk will be in a compressed form, and in this way greater exactitude in preparing food will be possible. Eggs will have disappeared from view, and instead a compound, manufactured from them, will obviate the possibility of spoiling a good dish by the introduction of a bad egg.

New Fruits and Vegetables.

Glass cases will contain displays of vegetables and fruits, and perhaps this will be the most wonderful feature of this new store. Fruits of unfamiliar size and general appearance, and vegetables, likewise, will greet the gaze. Many old favorites of little dietetic value will have disappeared and new, highly nourishing ones brought to perfection by scientific cross-breeding will be kept.

By removing the stock, which under the prevailing conditions, will not be a very great undertaking, the entire interior can be washed by a hose. Dust, dirt and microbes will find an inhospitable abode in the grocery store of the future. Ice will no longer play an important part in the internal economy of stores where perishable goods are kept. Instead, refrigerators will be arranged with ammonia tubes, as the windows before mentioned.

Will Still Be Advertising.

Advertising will have reached enormous proportions, and will be under Government supervision. False statements with regard to the merits of goods will be rigorously followed up, and if a Government test fails to discover the features as set forth in the advertising certain adequate penalties will be imposed.

Improved Transportation and Its Miracles.

To all business men the matter of transportation is always an interesting one and one hundred years hence the products of far-off countries will be available in very brief periods. For instance, if a grocer wishes to order a few cases of French peas from a French house, these will be sent immediately by air vessels, which will make the trip from land to land in eighteen hours. With the inauguration of this rapid service the products of foreign countries will be at the grocers' disposal on short notice.

Wireless telegraphy and telephony at small rates will make communication more easy. Mail will be sent by pneumatic tubes at the rate of a thousand miles an hour, so it will be observed, the grocer of the future will have comparatively few troubles to worry him with regard to transportation. Railroads, which will have ceased to be of use except in a small way as freight carriers, will be of the mono-rail principle, and even these slow freight trains will develop easily a speed of one hundred miles an hour. This is rendered possible by virtue of the introduction into each car of a gyroscope, which will maintain the car's equilibrium on sharp corners, and in fact anywhere.

The Future Delivery Wagon.

Noiseless electric delivery wagons will be used to deliver goods. The old-fashioned heavy and cumbersome storage battery will be displaced by machines which will carry small, light batteries. Every mile or so there will be public charging stations operated by the Government, where for a small fee power can be obtained.

The Grocer and His Clerks.

Socially, the position of the grocer will be better in the community than it is now, as the old prejudices against tradesmen will have disappeared. Grocery clerks will know elementary chemistry at least, and the values of various foods from a dietetic standpoint will be a part of their knowledge. It will not be an uncommon occurrence indeed to hear a clerk telling a customer the precise chemistry of some product which he is trying to sell. He will speak of its proteid percentage, nitrogenous value and other results of quantitative analysis.

Government Supervision.

In the present action of all enlightened Governments in making adequate laws to prevent adulteration of foods we see the forerunner of Government supervision of stores where foodstuffs are sold. Investigation which is being carried on to-day with reference to the essential part innocuous bacteria play in proper aging of certain foodstuffs will be perfected and the general operations of the body will be known to all, so we may look upon the grocer of one hundred years hence as a scientist as well as a tradesman.

DOES SOLICITING ORDERS PAY?

A Cleveland grocer, writing to the Press Bulletin of the National Retail Grocers' Association of the United States, takes up in a thoroughly practical way the question of soliciting orders, as follows :

"To abandon taking orders means saving of expense, in labor, wear and tear on horses and wagons.

"Taking orders stimulates credit business, consequently more losses, and often is the means of a great deal of unpleasantness usually found on the outside of the canvas which are really detrimental to any business.

"It really prevents some people from coming to the store, where one could show goods to better advantage and naturally sell more goods to the consumer.

"It takes one's working force away from the store, and out of sight, during the busiest time of the day, and cripples the serving force on the floor.

"It causes to a large degree 50 per cent. of the work to be done in 10 per cent. of the time, compelling the utmost speed on putting up orders, which means, very largely, careless weighing and measuring and irregular packages, which make an order unsightly, consequently detrimental to one's business, for all the little things go to make up the one big item, viz., a first-class store.

"Supposing a merchant loses 25 or 33 1-3 per cent. of his order business. This might mean 5 or 8 per cent. of his entire business, possibly more or less. This is the only possible loss by the change.

"I verily believe that loss can be made up by the increase of sales in the store, by the saving of petty accounts, and the wear and tear on horses and wagons and the help expense.

"The following is a summary of my business to-day : Cash sales, 36 per cent.; credit sales, 64 per cent.; store charges, 37 per cent.; phone charges, 15 per cent.; solicits, 12 per cent.

"If I would lose all soliciting orders I would lose 12 per cent., but I don't think that I shall lose 10 per cent. of this business, which would mean 1.2 per cent. of the soliciting business."

USEFUL HINTS FOR GROCERS.

Get the smile habit.

One of the best forms of advertising for a retailer is to give good service in his store.

A fooled customer is a man with a grievance and not pleasant to meet or to count on as a future buyer.

Many a man would be unable to paddle his own canoe if he couldn't borrow some other man's paddle.

Andrew Carnegie says : "To succeed put all your eggs in one basket and then keep your eye on the basket."

A smile is like salt—too much of it would spoil the meat, but just enough will put a flavor into it as nothing else can.

"Knocking" a competitor is poor policy. The merchant doesn't do it. Always speak well of everybody.

Grain Carrying via Canadian Routes

WHY AND HOW THIS BUSINESS IS INCREASING—AN IMPORTANT TRANSPORTATION PROBLEM.

During the past season the press of Canada has published reports coming from New York, Boston and Philadelphia, as well as from Canadian points, calling attention to the fact that the grain transportation business is being gradually diverted from the United States ports to Canadian routes. This fact elicits inquiry as to the reason for the change, and also points out that these conditions will continue to flourish in an increasing degree favorable to Canada. It is well known to those who are familiar with the chief characteristics of the American people, that they are, as a rule, quick to observe any advantage, both nationally and individually. The individual grain shipper of the northwestern portion of the United States was quick to perceive the advantages of the St. Lawrence route, and this has resulted in the loss to his country of the profits of this transportion trade, to say nothing of the loss to them also of a portion of Canada's trade. What should be a source of congratulation to Canadians is the fact that these conditions have arisen from natural geographical advantages, rather than from artificial reasons, and, consequently, a long look into the future seems to render them unchangeable for a long time to come.

Must Develop Our Facilities.

Let it be granted that Canada possesses superior natural facilities it now becomes necessary for her to make the most of these. It is unfortunate, but, nevertheless true, that the Canadian people have not fully awakened to this fact until lately. In consulting the statistics of expenditure on the St. Lawrence route and its tributaries it is found that $150,000,000 has been spent. With this large expenditure it is reasonable to ask whether we have been getting the amount of trade proportionate to the outlay.

The Canadian West has developed so rapidly that it has been impossible to cope with the increase in the volume of trade. This fact leads to a consideration of the condition of the canals lying between Montreal and the ports of the Great Lakes. The Welland Canal has a depth of only 14 feet, as also the Prescott canals. This means that vessels coming from the Upper Lakes with more than 75,000 tons are obliged to unload at Buffalo and from there the grain finds its way to New York, Boston, Baltimore, Portland and Philadelphia. At the present moment there are ships plying the Upper Lakes of from 275,000 to 300,000 bush. capacity, consequently these boats cannot go through the canals and proceed to Montreal without discharging a large proportion of their cargo and to do this would not be profitable. Instead the boats unload at Buffalo, and then return to Duluth, Fort William and Chicago for fresh cargoes. It would seem, therefore, that the thing of vital importance now, is the deepening of the Welland and Prescott canals, and in this way eliminating Buffalo as a discharging point. Such would be the result to a certain extent and there is no doubt but that Montreal would benefit largely by such improvements. A proportion of traffic would still go by Buffalo, however, which would then be used as an overflow point at the height of the season.

The Georgian Bay Canal Scheme.

There is another plan now seriously being considered by the Government which would result more completely in the elimination of the American ports from Canadian grain transportation trade, namely, the construction of the Georgian Bay Canal. If a map of Canada is consulted it will be seen that grain which goes entirely by an all-lake route is diverted a long distance from a direct path between Western lake points and Montreal. Another favorable point in the Georgian Bay plan is the fact that if this line be continued on to Liverpool, it will be found that Montreal is the nearest great port to it. This is significant, and the greatest argument in favor of the Georgian Bay route, as it means that a larger amount of American wheat and produce will find its way to the European markets through the port of Montreal.

GRAIN CARRYING—A View of the M ontreal Waterfront.

No Doubt as to Scheme's Validity.

Perhaps one who wishes to take a pessimistic view of the future would say that the prospects would not warrant this great national undertaking. The other day J. J. Hill, who bears the reputation of being one of the most astute financial men in the United States, made the statement that that country was approaching an economic revolution owing to congestion, and that Canada would be the greatest wheat-producing country in the Western Hemisphere. There was a time in the history of the United States when all the wheat was produced in Northern New York and the territory around about, but now these old-time wheat fields are covered with cities towns and villages, and the area once devoted to the cultivation of wheat is given up to more concentrated industry. This concentration and congestion will yearly reduce the wheat areas in that country, and Canada will largely export to the United States as well as to England. Not only has there been a wonderful development in the Western part of Canada, but now attention is being drawn to Northern Ontario and Quebec, and this means that our transportation lines, to be of the greatest service, must lie well to the north, as development continues to spread in that direction, as well as to the west.

A Comparison of Various Routes.

After a consideration of these various waterways, the question naturally arises as to what are the advantages in distances saved? This will be answered by the following tables, which show the Canadian lake and rail route as in operation at the present time, as compared with the United States routes.

Canadian Routes.

	Miles.
Fort William to Victoria Harbor or Midland (by water)	470
Victoria Harbor to Montreal by C.P.R. or Midland to Montreal by G. T. R.	360
Total	830
Duluth to Victoria Harbor or Midland (by water)	580
Victoria Harbor to Montreal by C. P. R., or Midland to Montreal by G. T. R.	360
Total	940
Chicago to Victoria Harbor or Midland (by water)	520
Victoria Harbor to Montreal by C.P.R., or Midland to Montreal by G. T. R.	360
Total	880

United States Routes.

Fort William to Buffalo (by water)	750
Buffalo to New York (by New York Central)	440
Total	1,190
Duluth to Buffalo (by water)	860
Buffalo to New York (by N.Y.C.)	440
Total	1,300
Chicago to Buffalo (by water)	775
Buffalo to New York (by N.Y.C.)	440
Total	1,215

These figures show the comparative differences in the American and Canadian lake and rail routes, which are by many hundred miles favorable to Canada. Not only are the Canadian routes shorter to Fort William and Port Arthur, but they also bring Montreal much nearer Chicago and Duluth than New York is by way of Buffalo.

Montreal Appreciates Situation.

Montreal has not been slow in realizing the increased responsibility which will be placed upon her by improved waterways between Montreal and the West. Harbor improvements have been keeping pace with the volume of trade coming through the port, and to-day she has one of the most perfect, if not the most perfect, systems for handling grain in operation in the world. This plant has cut the expense of loading ocean boats in half. From Montreal to the sea the channel has been deepened and widened, and adequately buoyed with acetylene buoys, all of which has made the river more readily navigable, both by day and night. So much has the St. Lawrence route been brought into public notice, that the White Star Line will have ships on this route next summer, and other lines are contemplating following their example. The White Star decision to do this coincides almost exactly with the completion of the harbor sheds which is opportune. On the 3rd of October last Hon. L. P. Brodeur, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, drove the last rivet in shed No. 11, signifying the completion of fourteen steel and concrete sheds on the high level wharves of the port at an expenditure of five million dollars. Thus it will be seen that from the moment Mr. Brodeur drove the last rivet—a silver one—the national port of Canada commences a new era, with facilities for handling ocean traffic which is commensurate with her importance.

Giving Credit Where Due.

It would be impossible to make this article complete without some reference to the men who have controlled the undertaking. As has been suggested, the harbor of Montreal has been the sport of politicians, but for some years this unhappy order of affairs has altered and now the affairs of the port are administered in a businesslike way and the results are highly gratifying to all loyal Canadians who take an interest in the future development of the country. The Harbor Commissioners under whose supervision these works have been carried out are Major Geo. W. Stephens, chairman; L. E. Geoffrion and C. G. Ballantyne, everyone of whom are business men of the highest merit. Further eulogy is not necessary, as the structures now to be seen along the water front will remain lasting monuments to their administrative ability, and these gentlemen will not find the Canadian people ungrateful to them for their efforts to place Canada in the position which her natural resources claim for her.

GRAIN CARRYING—A Group of Canadian Grain Boats.

SOME INCIDENTS OF PRICE-CUTTING.

The merchant is pretty well posted on the evils of price cutting. He knows, if he has been in business very long, just where to draw the line, just how far he dares go in lowering quotations for the sake of drawing trade. He realizes that even if the principle of using "leaders" to attract customers is permissible, it is limited in its usefulness and exceedingly dangerous when overdone. Not only is it apt to lead to dissatisfaction among customers, not only does it have a tendency toward giving a store a cheap reputation, but it is inclined to arouse suspicion among other merchants and result in a price war, always disastrous to some merchant and some business, and generally to all of them.

But, while the merchant is so thoroughly grounded in the matter of price-cutting, the public has not been so generally educated, either by publications or by experience. There are those who exult when they have succeeded in stirring up two store managers to anger at each other, believing, and with some reason, that they may profit by the losses of the two. It is just the old fable of Aesop over again—the lion and the bear fight over the prey until both are too much exhausted to move, and then the sly fox comes along and picks up the dainty and bears it away to eat at his leisure.

The public rejoices over the price-cutting campaigns. It profits by them, and, on account of the fact that it has been taught to consider prices only, it feels justified in taking every advantage offered it. Let us consider how this has worked in the past.

First, a store has begun a campaign of price-cutting. It advertises flamboyantly, shouting that it sells goods cheaper than anybody else, sometimes charging that others get undue profits. It bellows and roars and screams for the sake of drawing custom. One of two things is surely taking place. Either the store will soon go under, either because it has been foolish or because it has made up its mind to defraud its creditors, or else it sells goods which are far lower in merit and true value than it pretends. No matter which may be true, the results are evil to the other merchants. If the first, because of lost trade; if the latter, because of a lowering in the standards of popular buying.

The public loses too, but it does not realize it. If a store fails to pay its creditors, the wholesalers and manufacturers must make their losses good in some way. Perhaps the public pays for that loss on the next rise in the market, but it pays sometimes and in some way. If the store seeks to foist inferior goods upon the public at a lower price, the public gets what it pays for, no doubt, but believes that it has been cheated and robbed, and comes to have a low opinion of merchants as a whole. The whole trouble lies in the fact that the public instead of being a prey to the merchant, is really playing into the hands of sharpers while seeking, too often, to get the best of the merchants.

The gist of the whole matter is in the remedy. How are we to teach the public that its true interests lie in paying a fair price, in discounting extravagant assertions of cheap stores and in seeking the betterment of true mercantile conditions. The disorganizations of the merchants injure the people. To teach them that should be the aim of every merchant.

At all opportunities, seek to educate, endeavor to teach that price maintenance is not in restraint of trade, but rather in promotion of trade, that it does not hurt the public, but that it protects the public.—Oregon Tradesman.

OTHER MEN'S VIEWS.

Let some other man tell you how to cut down your office work.

It seems strange, but it is, nevertheless, a fact, that very few men are able to cut down their own office work to the point where it belongs. Forms are adopted for certain purposes and others are added from time to time until the work in the ordinary office becomes complicated. This goes on from year to year, new blanks being added, new books opened, new card indexes installed, etc., but nothing eliminated. The result is an occasional increase in the office force to take care of the increase in the amount of work.

The man in charge of office affairs is usually the busiest one in the house, and he does not have time to figure out the shorter ways of doing things, so as to accomplish more with the same amount of work, and the habits having been contracted, become second nature.

The next time it is felt to be necessary to add to the office force, try this plan: Just have an office expert come in and look over the business, size up the present office system and tell him what you wish to accomplish, and let him plan an up-to-date system for you. Of course, his services cost money, and so will the new equipment he will order installed, but had better spend more that way and save it in the following year in wages of office help, for the new system will more than likely do away with all need of adding to the force for a good while to come, and will also lighten the work on those who are already overworked under old conditions. —F. A. P. in Grocery World.

"If your mother bought four baskets of grapes, the dealer's price being a quarter a basket, how much money would the purchase cost her?" asked the new teacher.

"You can never tell," answered Tommy, who sat at the head of his class. "Ma's great at bargaining!"

Grow Your Own Eggs and Vegetables

MANY GROCERS COULD SUPPLY THEIR LOCAL TRADE WITH FRESHEST STOCK AT FANCY AND PROFITABLE PRICES.

During the twenty-one years of progress The Grocer has suggested many innovations which have been adopted with much profit by its readers. Beginning five or six years ago, articles have appeared from time to time showing the money to be made in handling flowers, either by carrying them in stock as a regular department, or to be supplied on commission as demand may arise for funerals, wedding or other functions. A growing business along these lines is now being steadily done by the dealers in even some of the smaller villages. In some cases even greater progress has been made than The Grocer originally proposed, for here and there in the larger towns the retailers have, as has been recorded in these columns, actually built greenhouses and have grown their own flowers, reaping very large profits on the investment and getting a great deal of pleasure as all business men do—from seeing things grow.

Further Opportunity for the Grocer.

The marked success of this new departure suggests a further development in this field. The retail grocer should now consider the production of many of the fresh vegetables and also of eggs and chickens for his high-class trade—a trade that will pay the high prices that will yield handsome profits. Of course, the masses will absorb the less profitable canned products, but the trade in fresh vegetables will all be found business. It may have to be canvassed for by personal calls or by telephone.

There are few grocers outside the cities and towns who have not an acre or more at their back door where they can raise all the fresh eggs and vegetables that the local trade will absorb at fancy prices in the early spring and late fall. If not, there is a nearby farmer with whom a co-partnership could be arranged.

Mr. Miller, editor of the Garden Magazine, has recently given much attention to this subject in the interest of suburban residents, and to the disadvantage of the dealer. By his methods, fresh vegetables can be grown in most parts of Canada throughout October and most of November. He says:

"The regular thing to expect is a frost that will kill the tenderest vegetables during the last week of September or the first week of October, after which we are likely to get two weeks or more of sunny weather, during which even corn and beans will ripen.

Protecting From Frosts.

"There is one simple plan that will protect all vegetables from a killing frost. Cover them toward nightfall with anything that will keep out the frost—boxes, barrels, burlap, old carpets, cheesecloth, or even newspapers. There is no way to do this without work, but you need not spend one cent, and it is folly to let your garden be destroyed.

"Right now is the time to see what you have in your garden that needs protection and to ascertain whether you have enough material for covering. Don't put this off until frost threatens or you may scurry around in vain after the stores are closed. If you need a long strip of cheesecloth, get it now. And put what boxes and barrels you have in the garden now, so that they will be ready for instant use. Better have them outdoors than in the cellar until the season is over.

"The cheapest material is old newspapers, and it is astonishing what you can do with them. Few people remember that paper is an excellent non-conductor of heat and cold. You can lay papers over lettuce or any low-growing vegetables and keep them from blowing away by putting stones or dirt on the corners.

"For medium-sized vegetables, boxes and barrels are best, especially on the coldest nights, and for the tenderest vegetables, such as egg plants and peppers.

Treating a Big Garden.

"The ideal material for a big garden is cheesecloth, because you can cover or uncover long rows in less time than in any other way, and it is not heavy or unsightly, like a lot of dry goods boxes. and the best way to use it is to drive a pair of stakes at either end of the row of bush beans or other vegetables and stretch two wires the length of the row. This makes a frame to hold the cloth. It is not necessary, but if you have tender foliage and heavy covering material it is desirable.

"If you live in a climate where a succession of light frosts is expected you can protect vegetables and flowers simply by sprinkling them thoroughly at nightfall. If you have plenty of hose this method will cost you nothing and may enable you to save your cannas, dahlias, salvias and other tender flowers from two to four weeks or more after those of your neighbors have been singed or crippled. But this method will not do for a hard freeze.

"Now for the tall vegetables. You can bend two to four hills of corn and wrap the tops with burlap. Even if the stems crack a little, no damage may be done. This same method could be used on pole beans, but it is better to lift the poles gently and lay them down in rows—vines and all. Then you can cover them all quickly.

"The tender vegetables are the tomato family (tomatoes, egg plants and peppers), beans, corn, okra and the vines (pumpkins, squash, melons and sweet potatoes). These cannot stand any frost. The first four named are really perennials and will go on bearing fruit just as long as you can protect them from frost.

"The hardy vegetables are the cabbage family (cabbage, Brussels sprouts, turnips and radishes, but cauliflower is tender). beets, carrots, onions, parsnips, spinach, peas and lettuce. Celery can stand 22 degrees Fahrenheit if banked with earth and covered with boards and hay.

Lettuce in December—Tomatoes at Christmas.

"There are two special methods I want you to try this fall. The gardener I spoke of says he has lettuce until December by lifting the plants, setting them closely in a trench and covering them with straw, hay or other clean, loose litter.

"Everybody knows that you can save tomatoes and peppers by picking them green and laying them on a window sill indoors where the sun will ripen them. And it is a common practice to pick all the little green tomatoes the day before a frost and make them into pickles. But few people seem to know that you can have ripe tomatoes until Christmas by uprooting the vines and hanging them upside down in a barn or stable.

Several Summer Sowings.

"Next year I hope you will sow nearly all the important vegetables once in June, once in July and a few in August. Most people forget these summer sowings and consequently their gardens in October look like the last run of shad. There is not the slightest reason why our gardens should have big gaps in September. How few gardens have peas in the fall, or corn in late September. Yet both crops are perfectly easy to have if you will sow the former in August and the latter about the fourth of July. Moreover, by summer sowings you can fill the cold room of your cellar with vegetables that will last all winter. Better make a note of this now, where it will be sure to turn up next February, when you are planning your garden and making out your seed order.

A New Idea in Cold Frames.

This fall I am going to try a new scheme. For the first time there is a commercial offering of small portable cold frames, only two feet square or thereabouts. I suspect that this is an adaptation to America of the famous 'French system,' whereby market gardeners near Paris are said to make $1,200 an acre, or six times as much as ordinarily. The Frenchmen use millions of bell jars, or hand lights. Some of them are large enough to cover a whole melon vine during March and April, or a pepper plant in October. Although the idea is an old one in Europe, is practically unknown here. Perhaps the American glass factories cannot make the bell jars cheaply enough. Anyhow, these portable cold frames strike me as being a sort of miniature greenhouse without any expense for coal, by means of which I can protect any plant I have that does not grow more than two feet high. I hope these frames will enable me to have lettuce, endive, spinach and radishes until Christmas, After that I want a continuous supply of those new species of winter-blooming crocuses. I never did have pansies, daisies and violets enough in February and March. I can have forced rhubarb in April by setting a few of these frames on the rhubarb bed in March and piling fresh manure around them.

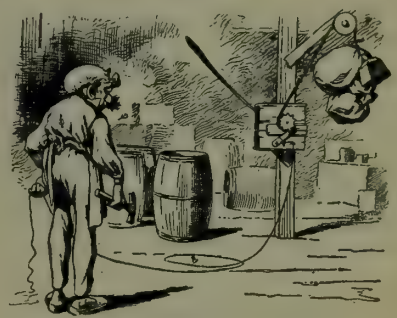
"But even if I should fail in all these special things I know these frames will enable me to gain a fortnight or even a month on vegetables and flowers in the spring by sowing the seeds in these frames in March."

ENGLISH GROCERS ADOPT FIXED PRICES.

The Bedford (Eng.) Grocers' Association, wise in their generation, have passed a resolution pledging themselves to encourage the sale of proprietary articles which yield a reasonable profit if the selling price is protected, and to discourage the sale of any article "on which a fixed minimum selling price has been put by the manufacturer unless he makes stipulations to prevent that minimum being circumvented or indirectly broken." Of course, where dividends or discounts are given the minimum prices do not work out satisfactorily, and the grocers must take measures to protect themselves so far as that point is concerned. They have the matter practically in their own hands if they will only pull together consistently. When they systematically "discourage" the sale of any particular specialty, it is not likely to make a great deal of progress. It may be kept in the background if stocked at all, and, in the event of its being asked for, it is not an impossible feat for a clever salesman to sell something else—"something better at the price," and highly recommended by the wise expert behind the counter. Many people enter a grocer's shop prepared to buy almost anything placed before them in an effective and attractive manner, especially when they have confidence in the grocer's business knowledge and capacity. Such a little turns the scale, as may be said, when the local conditions are favorable. Customers often go out with what they had no intention of buying when they went in—which is good for trade.—Commercial Bulletin.

An Old-Time Grocer's Predicament.

No. 1.—"Drat them boys, they're in my sugar barrel again."



No. 2.—"Now I'll just take the string into the front shop, and when I hears 'em at the barrel, well, ——"

No. 3.—"Granulated sugar, Mrs. Stubbs? Right in ther back store, mum. How much, mum?"

No. 4.—"But Mrs. Stubbs got tangled up in the string, and there was something doing right away.

VEGETABLE THERAPEUTICS.

Girls who eat green peas are bound to flirt; they can't help it.

Cabbage and cauliflower make persons vulgar and stupid. And the cure for a bad tempered husband is to fill him with boiled carrots.

These are a few of the laws of vegetable therapeutics as laid down in the recent Pathological Congress of Parism. The pathologists pointed out that although some vegetables are a preventive against diseases of one sort or another, there are many vegetables which produce serious illness.

After many experiments the investigators laid down broad laws of vegetable therapeutics.

Potatoes, for instance, should be eaten by judges, magistrates, editors and those engaged in similar occupations; they develop the reasoning faculties; give great mental balance and calmness.

Over indulgence, however, produce apathy, indifference, laziness. Confirmed potato eaters are likely to possess more reasoning power than warmth of heart.

Carrots will cure bad temper. They are especially good for bilious and peevish folks. The carrot-eater will become in time easy going, good natured and placidly affectionate.

Spinach is good for men of action. Those who yearn for poetic thoughts and artistic ideas should go in for string beans. Green peas, as has been said, are dangerous in the extreme. They develop frivolity. They make women capricious and reckless. Men and women who eat green peas are given to flirting.—The Canner.

"Men Who Sell Things"

The Salesman's Relation to the Credit Department—How He Can Be a Help and a Hindrance to the Firm's Credit Man—The Why and Wherefore of Carrying a Customer Along.

By Walter D. Moody—Serial rights for Canada purchased by the MacLean Publishing Co. from the publishers, A. McClurg & Co., Chicago.

CHAPTER XIX

Credit builds up business; truth builds up credit.

The fortune of a business house rests on the wisdom and courage of the credit man.

There are three vital branches—buying, selling, and credits.

The credit department, while last in the logical line-up, is first in real importance in the final analysis of the house's prosperity as a whole. The woods are full of salesmen—bright men who can argue and ably defend the right of the selling branch to claim paramountcy over the other two; and buyers are ever ready to fall back on the old axiom, "Goods well bought are half sold"; but in reality the credit department is the foundation stone upon which rests the prosperity of salesmen, buyers, and all.

A Railway Comparison.

These three great departments are so closely interlinked that perforce they must go forward, shoulder to shoulder, supporting one another. Like the engine, tender, and cars of a train, they must pull together. The engine hauls the train; the tender carries the coal and water with which to get up steam, and the cars bear the load. Each has its work to perform. The breaking of a coupling threatens disaster and means a standstill all around.

The object of a train of cars is to get somewhere with something. The something is its freight. A great business house is a commercial train in charge of engineer and conductor.

The Salesman An Engineer.

Somewhere in a book on salesmanship I have seen the salesman described as the engine, steam, coal, and the whole paraphernalia. Not so. The salesman is just the engineer furnishing the force. The buyer is the tender supplying the material. The credit man is the car that carries the load. The track is its trade.

The real object of the entire outfit is the load. In business the load is its credits. Credits properly made mean profits and salaries. The credit man is the conductor of the train. The best thing the salesman can do if he wants to get aboard is to keep near the cars. Credit men are the commercial conductors, and salesmen are the commercial engineers; there you have it right.

Every salesman should seek to establish a close friendly relationship with the credit man of his house. The man who thinks he can get along well enough by himself makes a great mistake, encountering many pitfalls that could easily have been avoided by advising with his credit man. In the end he must do that anyway, for no sale is final until it passes the credit department. The salesman who thinks he could get along very nicely if it were not for the "old man" at the desk would get along a great deal better if he took him entirely into his confidence and freely sought his advice concerning his trade.

Can Give Valuable Ratings.

In turn, information to the credit man from the salesman, under ordinary conditions, is peculiarly valuable. The salesman is posted as is no one else, by frequent visits, knows the buyers' strong and weak points, the general condition of trade in the towns and surrounding country, and, if shrewd, can intuitively sense the hazard of an account from actual contact with all conditions surrounding it. If a salesman reports his opinion of each risk assumed by the house on his territory, it does not take long to tell the value of his observations and whether he possesses the capacity of giving a dependable rating.

The credit man, like the salesman, must know more of a man than he knows himself.

The two classes of men resemble each other in the delicacy and the onerousness of the duty they have to perform in reading the signs of the coming stoppage of an account.

No salesman, however efficient in other respects, who saddles his firm with uncollectable or troublesome accounts, can hope to succeed in the long run. He is a source of loss instead of a medium of profit.

The First Judge of Credits.

In reality, the salesman is the first judge of credits for his house. No matter what fate may attend his choice of accounts, when they reach the credit man the first selection is entirely in his hands. If he is bent on rolling up sales at any hazard more than to the more important work of carefully picking his way and keeping the credit department posted on the changing complexion of his customers' affairs, he will find himself continually in hot water. He is the first judge of credits in every transaction. The credit man may exercise supervision, may accept or reject his orders, but he depends upon the salesman's judgment more than any other source of information, and looks to him as the man on the ground.

Exercise your discretion to the best of your ability, and where the slightest doubt exists as to a basis for credit, tell the credit man all about it. Many salesmen, like the ostrich that hides his head in the sand, point only to the bright side, in the blind hope that the other side will not be detected. One thing is certain where this is practised: if the credit man is unable to verify the negative side, accepting the salesman's report, and ship the goods, sooner or later the telltale truth will come out in the ledger. "Be sure your sin will find you out"; there is no escaping that ledger in its work of separating the sheep from the goats. Then it is that the salesman's weakness is discovered and his measure taken.

Poor Credits Betray Themselves.

The shrewdest and most experienced make mistakes, but picking good accounts means a great many things to be avoided as well as accomplished. A general warning for over-zealous salesmen, and especially for the young salesmen, may be sounded in the statement that poor credits always betray themselves to the close observer in some manner or other, and to avoid unpleasant complications the result of such observations should always accompany the order. Better still, leave the "lame ducks" for the other fellow. There is no sport to the real sportsman in taking a crack at a winged bird simply to bag the game. Go after the good accounts; there are plenty of these on every man's territory.

When an account that has once been good begins to go the other way, do all you can to preserve it by proper nursing, helpful suggestions, and accurate information to the credit department. Remember that the very existence of your house rests on the ability of its credit man to know the assets of his customers, the condition of their business, the chances of being willing and able to pay. With his experienced eye and mind he can foresee a coming crash long before the man most interested. He can see the faults of location, of stock, of character of the man. In refusing credit he often renders a service to the prospective customer, but it is seldom appreciated. Now and then a merchant is wise enough to take advantage of the candid opinion of an outsider and curtail rather than increase his liabilities. Usually he is not.

Helping the Customer.

On the other hand, the credit man, by extending credit, often puts heart into a struggling man and makes his success certain. A mark of confidence from one whose judgment is considered good is enough to strengthen a merchant's belief in himself, shaken, perhaps, by unexpected experiences.

When you are tempted to inwardly curse the credit man for "sitting on orders," try to figure out, if you can, that you have no one but yourself to blame for your disappointment. Orders "held up" in the office form two classes —those that are "N.G.," and those that require the most rigid inspection. The latter frequently receive the approval of the credit man and are "passed out" as soon as he is satisfied from all points of the compass that no real risk is involved. The delay in shipment often rests with the salesman for not having furnished a correct statement with the order. Remember, the credit man must make no mistakes. There is no department of the establishment where a blunder may prove so costly. He must not reject a good customer or approve a bad one. He must use tact in ascertaining the truth and in stating it. The future of the house rests on his wisdom and courage. A credit man can no more make mistakes without discovery than a train despatcher can. He cannot begin over again like a salesman or buyer; he must do perfect work every time. He cannot sink his personality in mechanical performance of duty; his personality is the essential part of his equipment for work.

The Credit Man's Ideal.

The science of credits is not an exact one, and not one to which the same rules are applicable at all times and for all lines of business. The endeavor of the credit man is to keep his losses as near the zero point as possible without limiting sales. There are many things he must know, to guide the ship of commerce with which he is intrusted, such as the condition of a territory as regards money when a comparatively small area may be experiencing business depression because of continued bad weather, extension of a new railroad cutting off trade, crop failure, or similar causes, while other territory in the same locality is enjoying phenomenal prosperity; he must be informed as to the cost of production, amount of stock on hand, and in fact all the operative details of his own business, to enable him to judge wisely in putting out goods. He is obliged to have access to many sources of information. What a great help it is to the credit man to know he can rely absolutely upon the trustworthiness of his salesmen!

The credit man's position is the most responsible of all in the establishment. Like a woman's work, it is never done. He is first at his desk in the morning and the last to leave at night. Don't add to his cares by being churlish in fancying you are not getting a square deal when your orders are occasionally delayed, or ruled out altogether. In his every action the best interests of the house receive his first consideration. If it were otherwise, how long could it continue to pay you your salary? Too often is criticism of the credit department indulged in, because of the salesman's desire to increase his sales at any risk.

Judging a Credit Customer.

In judging a basis for credit on short notice, when selling to a customer for the first time, the salesman is obliged to act quickly. His time with his customer is necessarily limited. He sells a bill and is on his way to the next town. The habit of observation, alertness, most of all his powers of perception are the qualities which must determine the worth of a new man. The ledger will find him out in the long run—that is not difficult; the thing is to do so on the spot by common instinct.

It is the place of the credit man, and not of the salesman, to ask direct questions, for the attempt to investigate a customer's affairs by that method is offensive, and nearly always resented. It is a barrier to sales-making. Intuition is the only safeguard with which to take the measure of the trustworthiness of a man on first approach.

It is not easy to sell goods to a hard-headed dealer who discounts all his bills. The man to look out for is the one who places his orders with a lavish hand, indicating his belief that a wholesale retirement of manufacturers and jobbers is imminent. Such a buyer leaves usually without even so much as asking your terms. The wary salesman is always suspicious of the man to whom he can sell without an effort. A reckless buyer invites failure from the start. It is only a question of how long the bank can stand the run before his creditors are notified that a smash-up is inevitable.

The Store a Good Index.

The general appearance of a merchant's store or office is a pretty sure indicator of his moral and financial standing. Any evidence of waste, lack of system, or bad management should not be overlooked. A slovenly kept store goes hand in hand with inefficient office management. Haphazard bookkeeping has ruined many a small merchant. It is the common experience of most salesmen frequently to encounter dealers who do not know the cost of things and cannot tell from year to year whether they are making a profit or a loss. Their collections are no better than their payments.

Steer clear of the man who spends money that belongs to his business. The high-liver, however prosperous he may appear, is a menace to credit.

It is a good thing for the salesman to realize that every time his house extends a line of credit to the financially low-water merchant, it is doing him a far better business turn than his local bank in loaning him a few hundred dollars.

PRESTIGE.

Prestige is defined as the influence which arises from reputation. That being the case, it naturally follows that anything which effectively spreads a firm's good reputation is a direct aid to prestige. Most travelers prefer to work for a firm which has prestige with the trade. The very weight of a name often helps a good deal. All concerns which persistently advertise in a good trade newspaper have more or less of prestige with the trade; because the fact that a firm persistently advertises is convincing evidence to the retailer of that firm's progressiveness and prominence in the trade. No use talking; live trade newspaper advertising, does tend to make the travelers' path easier to tread!

Buying Stock for a New Grocery

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS FOR BEGINNING THE BUSINESS.
BY WM. McCREA, GUELPH.

To a man beginning the grocery business the problem of what stock to buy, and how to distribute his capital, looms up as perhaps the most important. As a help to beginners, the following article, answering as far as possible the difficulties of the problem, has been written for us by a grocer well qualified to handle the subject.—Editor.

What stock should a man buy with a capital of say $1,500 or $2,000 is a question sometimes asked by a new grocer. How to acquire that amount is a harder problem to me. I shall work from the larger amount, as we like to have as much money as possible to do business with. Well, say $2,000 capital to invest in general groceries. My, I am glad no travelers are around to hear that. We will divide the amount up into four parts, say :

Staple groceries, 50 per cent. or	$1,000
Fixtures, including horse and rig, show cases, refrigerators and scales, 7½ p.c. or	650
Fancy goods, such as confectionery, cigars, fancy sauces, etc. 5½ p.c. or	100
Bank, including interest, etc., 12½ p.c.	250
Total	$2,000

The staples should include everything from A to Z that a first-class grocery store would stock. It depends a great deal on the time of year and also the locality what part of your stock should be the heaviest, as it varies a great deal at each season of the year, and your stock should be able to balance either way, or rather, if you prefer it, your capital should be ready to turn over just as often as possible. That is, at the end of each season you ought to have your money ready to invest again in the best sellers for the next season, as it is the constant turning over that makes the money. I do not believe in the idea of stocking for future use on small capital, and your wholesaler should carry the burden.

Advice to the Greenhorn.

Now, there is one more consideration, and it is a mighty large one to my mind. Do you know anything about the grocery business, such as what are values or the qualities of the different goods ? If you do not and you really want to invest your money, well, go right to the manager of any reliable wholesale grocery house and tell him exactly your position. If you don't depend on him or some one else's good judgment it is almost certain failure. Don't be afraid to depend on the honesty of your wholesale house, as it is to their interests to make a success out of you when they have your confidence.

Be Sure to Get the Discounts.

Do not buy in larger quantities than is really necessary to get good discounts, but be sure to buy large enough to get the regular discounts, and also be sure to have your cash ready to accept them, as it means a great saving in a year's business to be able to take the discounts. And always remember that goods well bought are half sold. Remember also that you cannot build up a successful business on groceries of inferior quality. Buy the best, as it takes the best to hold the best trade and the best is none too good for you.

WM. McCREA,

Of Guelph, the Writer of the Article on this Page, who has had Many Years of Experience in Several of Guelph's Best Groceries.

Now to give you an idea of how I would invest the amount named, we will spend it as far as we can intelligently and see what we can get for it on a fair estimate :

SUGAR, including granulated, yellow, loaf, icing, etc.	$ 100
TEAS, including one good 25c line and 40c line of each, and a good assortment of two good lines of package teas	80
COFFEE, one good 40c line and one cheap line	15
SPICES, peppers, including extracts by the gross, baking soda, cream of tartar, jelly powders, etc.	100
CANNED GOODS, including corn, peas, tomatoes, salmon and sardines	100
Raisins, currants, fruits, peels, nuts, etc.	100
Vinegar and pickles	80
Brooms, brushes, woodenware and matches	50
Oatmeal and cereals, assorted	50
CHEESE, including fancy varieties	50
MOLASSES, syrups, etc.	50
PRODUCE, including butter, potatoes, cheese, etc.	100
General assortment of biscuits	75
Sundries	50
Total	$1,000

Store Fixtures.

Horse and rig, $150 ; show case, $25 ; refrigerator, $150	325
Books, $25 ; shelving, scales, etc, $300	325
Total	$ 650

Other Incidentals.

FANCY GOODS, including cigars confectionery, etc.	100
BANK, including interest and assets, etc.	25
Grand total	$2,000

There goes our money at a good fair average. But it will not do to be hard or fast in any one particular instance. There should be a shifting from one house to another as the prices varied to where the best values were to be obtained. Always keep in mind the fact that quality should be your first consideration and not price.

ALWAYS A FAILURE.

"Do you think the fruit crop will be a failure this year ?"

"'Course it will," answered Farmer Corntossel, "If prices are high there's no fruit, and if prices are low there's plenty of it. The fruit crop is always a failure !"

BY THE BUSHEL MEASURE.

"To think," sighed the disheartened poet, "of having to write a bushel of love songs for a barrel of flour !"

"Why," said the other poet, "you are in great luck, my friend. I have two bushels of returned love songs on hand ; tell me where your groceryman is !"

Grocery News from Coast to Coast

WHAT THE TRADE IS DOING IN ALL PARTS OF CANADA

Quebec and the Maritime Provinces

Business Good in Nova Scotia—Enormous Lobster Shipment—St. John Stores Improving in Appearance—Officers of Montreal Grocers' Association.

HALIFAX.

October 13.—Business throughout the Province appears to be in a very satisfactory condition. Failures have been few, and paper, on the whole, has been well met. No very large stocks of goods are being ordered at present, but as soon as the elections are over and things assume their normal state it is expected that trade will be brisk. The fisheries have been good though the price for dry fish is low. The increased catch, however, will make up for any deficiency in this respect. The crops all over the Province have been good, especially that of fruit, and will bring in a large return to the farmer.

The local market at the present time is swamped with tomatoes, twelve-pound baskets selling for 25 cents, and they are going slow even at that. Cranberries are also very low. Some can be bought for $4.50 per barrel, but the choicest stock is selling for about six dollars.

Butter is in fairly good supply, but the price is firm. Good dairy stock can be purchased for 23 cents, while dairy is 27 to 28 cents. Eggs are a little easier, and are in fairly good supply. Sugar is firmer. New figs are now on the market, and new dried fruit will soon be along. Bananas are about done for the season, but oranges are coming on the market now in good supply. There is not much doing in the canned goods line at the present time. Smoked meats are in good demand.

The Lunenburg bank fishing season of 1908 is now about over and it will be of interest to those who are interested in the progress and prosperity of Nova Scotia to read of the unexcelled success of the Grand Bank fishery of the Gloucester of Canada.

In 1907 there were 109 vessels engaged in this industry, and the catch was 123,625 quintals. In 1908 there were 110 vessels engaged in the fishery, with a catch of 138,180 quintals. The average catch per vessel in 1907 was 1,134 quintals, and in 1908, 1,256, an increase per vessel of 132 quintals.

The Furness line steamer Shenandoah, which sailed this week from London, took away ten thousand cases of canned lobster, the largest shipment that has been made to the European markets this season. The lobster business this year has been most successful, about 115,000 cases in all being shipped through this port. The price this year has also been very good, the average per case of 48 tins being $16. This means that in the vicinity of $1,840,000 will be distributed among the fishermen, packers and shippers of the Province for their work during the season. The above only covers the shipments to the European markets, and as there is always a large number of lobsters sent to the United States and Western Canada as well as kept for home consumption, the total value of the season's catch will total fully $2,000,000.

Fall mackerel are still being taken on the western coast of Nova Scotia, and some large catches are being made. As high as twenty thousand were taken in one day at Peggy's Cove. The fish are of excellent quality; there is a ready market, and the price is good.

Over one hundred thousand barrels of apples have been shipped from Halifax so far this season. The export of fruit is very heavy, and it is expected to continue so for some time. The steamer Shenandoah, sailing this week, took 21,000 barrels, and the Furness liner Halifax City, 6,916 barrels. Both steamers are bound for Liverpool.

The apples offered for sale here are all fine stock, but the price is unusually low. Good Gravensteins, No. 1, are quoted at $2; No. 2's at $1.25 to $1.50, and No. 3's, $1 to $1.25. Golden Ball, Emperors and other early varieties are selling from $1.25 to $1.50.

At the Horticultural Show in Kentville this week there was a display of apples that could not be surpassed by any district in the world. Never before has there been such a magnificent exhibit of fruit. Five large tents were given up to apples in barrels. To give an idea of the class of fruit shown it is only necessary to state that in one barrel 15 apples (Blenheims) made the top layer, packed one row about the rim and five in the centre. The same number of Fallawaters made an equal showing, and the rest were Kings, 19 to the layer; Gravensteins, 21; Starks and Spies, 22 each, and Russets, 29. Only one barrel of the famous Cox's Orange Pippin was shown, and it won the special prize offered by J. E. DeWolf, of Halifax. The New Brunswick Cold Storage Company had an exhibit of apples grown in 1907. This fruit was in excellent condition, being quite firm and of excellent flavor.

ST. JOHN.

October 13.—In reviewing the business of the past summer, the grocers here feel well satisfied with the volume of trade. There was some little falling off for a time, but of late orders have been coming in freely and accounts have been satisfactorily met Prospects for a good winter trade are excellent.

There has been practically no change in the markets during the past week. Canned goods and other seasonable lines are coming in every day and advance orders are being filled.

On Monday night, Oct. 5, thieves broke into Robert McAvity's grocery store, Waterloo Street, and stole $15 from the till. Entrance was forced from the rear by breaking a window and reaching a latch on the inside of the door.

Burglars broke into the store of Ben Winsor, at New Mills, last Saturday morning and secured $127. The safe was blown to pieces. The break is supposed to have been the work of expert cracksmen, as nothing which could lead to identification was taken, although there were several negotiable cheques for large amounts in the drawer with the money.

F. & J. Watson, grocers, Main Street, are in financial difficulties. An informal meeting of their creditors was held on Monday, Oct. 5. The firm submitted an offer of 25 cents on the dollar and those present voted unanimously to accept it. The liabilities, which are about $4,000, are practically all local.

A Hartland correspondent writes:—The question of potatoes does not cease to be interesting, for that involves the matter of $1,000,000 for Carleton and Victoria Counties. Buyers estimate that not quite a third of the great crop has been hauled in. The price has been going upward at the rate of five cents a barrel a day until now the price is $1.05 to $1.10. Every farmer has a cellar full for the high prices of winter that seem a certainty. Reports from Montreal say that New Brunswick potatoes rule supreme over local stock on account of their excellent quality.

More attention seems to be given lately by local retailers to their window displays than was formerly the case. For a long time the majority of the merchants did not seem to realize what a benefit can be derived from a neat and attractive display of goods. The idea of dressing a window with one or two lines only and making them appeal to the passerby with a neat price tag and making changes every day or two, is being practised with much success by a number of merchants. A window filled with two or three dozen different varieties of goods, while in some cases it is attractive, yet doesn't appeal to the hurrying throng who might be halted by a card announcing that a large lot of so-and-so was being sold at a certain price. Especially where the price of an article is small, the tag on it is an invitation that five out of ten passersby cannot resist.

Quick delivery is another matter that is receiving considerable attention. In most of the stores now, one or two boys are engaged at a small wage, to run out with orders, as many people when telephoning for goods want them in a hurry, and the dealer who waits to send them in the regular delivery is likely to find he is losing his trade.

GEORGETOWN, P.E.I.

Oct. 13.—The three exhibitions held on Prince Edward Island this fall were a grand success. The weather was perfect—not a cloud in the sky and warm, very warm for the season. Never before did such numbers of people attend our exhibitions, never before was there such numerous and splendid exhibits Every department was over-crowded. Greater and more spacious accommodations must certainly be provided next year. These exhibitions go to show that better products cannot; in their classes, be grown on the American continent.

Ernest Coffin, proprietor Coffin & Co., Charlottetown, has returned from a pleasant visit to Montreal and several United States cities. Mr. Coffin was accompanied by his sister.

Shipping is becoming quite brisk. Eggs, which declined to 17 cents, are now 17½ cents. Oats are worth 40 to 42 cents. Potatoes are down to 20 cents. Hay is $6 to $8 per ton. Butter, 20 to 22 cents.

H. Lee, representing the William Paterson & Son Co., Brantford, was in town yesterday. This is the first time a representative of this firm has visited the Island and he reports business excellent.

The local election, which it is expected will take place about the middle of November, will be a very interesting contest. A. J. Macdonald, of A. A. Macdonald & Bros., is the Conservative candidate and W. W. Jenkins, of W. W. Jenkins, Son & Co. is the Liberal candidate.

Malaga and Almeria grapes are among the new fruits offered for sale. Some Jamaica oranges are also on the market. Gravenstein apples are the principal apple to be had and they are of excellent quality and very low.

In general collections are fair. The crops have been excellent and all harvested in good condition. Business is improving and the prospects were never better.

MONTREAL.

A. T. Robson, representing the large Liverpool grain importing firm of Ross T. Smyth & Co.; spent a few days in Montreal last week. This firm have branches in India, Russia and the Argentine Republic. Mr. Robson is the firm's representative in India with headquarters at Kerachi in the Province of Scinde. India has been suffering from a wheat famine and as the quantity available for export is extremely small he has come to Canada and will subsequently visit the United States in the hope of establishing a connection in these two countries for his firm. Mr. Robson has lived in India for the past ten years during which time he has been engaged in the grain business. He states that the prospects for next year's crop are very good as an abundance of rain has fallen. Speaking of methods of transportation, he said grain was carried almost exclusively by tramp steamers and as coolie labor is extremely cheap in that country grain is transferred to the steamers by coolies. Mr. Robson will go west, visiting Toronto, Winnipeg and other Western points.

J. A. DORE.
President-Elect Montreal Retail Grocers' Association.

A. SARRAZIN.
Elected Secretary Montreal Grocers' Association.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Lake-of-theWoods Milling Co., held October 7, Lt.-Col. F. S. Meighen was elected a director of the company to fill the vacancy left by the late Sir Robert Reid. Col. Meighen is a son of Robert Meighen, president of the company and has held the position of treasurer since its reorganization, having been a director previous to this.

J. L. Mitchell, president of the Montreal Dressed Meat Co., St. James St., has returned from a short visit to Atlantic City.

S. J. Mathewson, of Mathewson's Sons, is out of town spending a few days at Metis.

G. H. Alvin, Streetsburg, Pa., has been in town for a few days after having completed a tour of Ontario and the Canadian West. Mr. Alvin is looking over the ground with a view to establishing a canning plant somewhere in Canada. In discussing trade conditions Mr. Alvin remarked on the remarkable growth of some kitchen brands of goods. Some woman suddenly finds herself confronted with the necessity of earning her own living and remembers that she can make extra fine preserves or jams or perhaps a certain kind of pickles and then a beginning is made. People are partial to this form of goods as there is or they imagine there is a home-made taste about the goods which they do not get in the goods of the larger manufacturers. This is undoubtedly the case when these people start but with increase in business in a majority of cases they instal machinery similar to the other factories and then the home-made product begins to flow out in greater volume. Mr. Alvin thinks the United States people are ahead of the Canadian in methods of packing and the attractiveness of their packages. Regarding quality he didn't think they had any advantage of the Canadians but he said he was not very familiar with Canadian lines.

Alf. Foreman, manager of Carsleys' states that he is receiving numerous applications for space for demonstrations but owing to lack of space he was obliged to limit the number. He states that as it is, they have difficulty in showing their own goods.

The Ogilvie Flour Milling Co. and the Lake-of-the-Woods Milling Co. have both held their annual meetings and the statements have been in both cases very satisfactory. The Ogilvie Co. elected the following directors for the ensuing year: C. R. Hosmer, president; F. W. Thompson, vice-president and managing director; Sir George Drummond, Sir Montagu Allan, E. S. Clouston, H. S. Holt, Shirley Ogilvie and the following officers were appointed: W. A. Black, general manager western division; S. A. McMurtry, treasurer; T. Williamson, secretary; W. A. Gandle, assistant secretary; F. H. Anson, general superintendent; Lt.-Col. A. E. Labelle, local manager; Geo. A. Cosiett, Ft. William manager. The Geo. Creak Audit Co. were appointed auditors for the ensuing year. The reports read by the president show net profits for the year of $511,473. This is not as large as some years yet represents a very creditable year.

At the Lake-of-theWoods meeting the following directors were elected: Robert Meighen, president and managing director; Hon. Robert McKay, vice-president; G. V. Hastings, general manager; W. W. Hutchison, eastern manager; Robt. Reford, Abner Kingman, R. M. Ballantyne, Jas. W. Pyke, Frank S. Meighen. President Meighen, in addressing the directors, said the yearly net profits, $401,869.39 represented a good showing, taking into consideration the commercial depression of the year.

A meeting of the Retail Grocers' Association was held Wednesday night, Oct. 8, in their hall, St. Catherine St. After the secretary had read a favorable report of the finances of the picnic the election of officers for the ensuing year took place and resulted as follows: J. A. Dore, president; M. J. T. Boileau, 1st vice-president; A. Malo, 2nd vice-president; A. Laniel, treasurer; A. Sanazin, secretary; L. A. St. Pierre and J. T. Lussier, auditors.

Western Province Notes.

Vancouver Grocers' Pure Food Show Next Week—Bringing in Sugar From Scotland—New Grocery Warehouses at Saskatoon.

VANCOUVER.

October 10.—Following up the shipment of butter to the coast cities, dressed beef is being sent here by western Alberta. This week a carload was brought into Vancouver, while at the same time another car went on to Victoria. It was shipped from Edmonton and as it is all ready for the butchers and has been hung, it is expected that the toughness which is noticed in freshly-killed meat will be absent. The meat is scientifically prepared and is carried in cold storage. Every carcass is Government inspected and proven.

This week, too, saw the first carload of Niagara grapes arrive in Vancouver from St. Catharines, being both blues and reds. Last year they were brought through by express, but it is now possible to get them here in good shape by freight, and this will mean a considerable difference in the price. They retail at 50c per basket, and will prove a strong competitor to the California article. There are many people here who come from Ontario and know just what the Niagara grape is, so that it will not have to sell slowly before it is introduced, which is the case with an unknown article.

A sharp advance is noted in lard, pure going from 14c to 15¼c, and compound from 12½c to 14c.

A second cargo of sugar is to be brought in from Scotland by Henry Moss, of Victoria. Two or three months ago the first cargo was brought here, and the disposition of it was satisfactory enough to encourage Mr. Moss to make another venture. This will be sold the same as the first, at 5¼c, being ¼c lower than the product of the B.C. Sugar Refining Company, of this city.

Considerable export of potatoes, onions and apples is now going on. The Den of Ruthven, which left this week for New Zealand, carried 750 tons of apples, but most of these were from Oregon. It is expected that in time nearly all the Antipodean trade in apples will be done from British Columbia. This year some large shipments will be made from Vancouver and Victoria, which will include twelve cars from the Kettle river orchards, in the Boundary district, near Grand Forks. The Grand Forks' Fruit Growers' Association had orders for eighteen cars of apples for Australia, but owing to prior sales were able to ship only twelve. Three have already gone forward. Ashcroft potatoes and onions are being sent out to Fiji and Australia though not in particularly large quantities.

In regard to trade with other countries, it is expected that by next year bananas will be brought here from Mexico, instead of from the Isthmus, and pineapples as well. A great many pineapples are now imported from the Hawaiian Islands, and are of good quality, but the new line of transportation between British Columbia will facilitate trade.

W. J. Andrews, of the Golden Rule Grocery, Mount Pleasant, has returned from a month's trip to his old home in Ontario.

As a result of the efforts of C. V. Jones, of the Mason & Risch Company, a lodge of the United Commercial Travelers has been formed in Nelson, B.C. The instaling officers were, R. O. Mc-Clintock, J.S.C., of the grand jurisdiction of Oregon, Washington and British Columbia; E. J. Richardson, P.C.; R. A. Creech, J.C.; C. V. Jones, Con., and J. R. Waldie, page. Twenty-two members were initiated at the inaugural meeting and a number of applications were received for membership. The officers of the new lodge, which is numbered 437, are: E. J. Richardson, past councillor; Hamilton Byres, senior councillor; P. W. Gordon, junior councillor; Thomas Stary, secretary-treasurer; E. Ferguson, conductor; Lee McBride, page; J. W. Holmes, junior sentinel; executive committee, F. A. Estey, Ronald Brown, Fred Ritchie and C. I. Archibald. Congratulatory messages were received from No. 304, Calgary, and No. 434, Vancouver.

On Monday next will open the pure food show, which will be conducted under the auspices of the Vancouver Retail Grocers' Association. The present indications are that it will be a big success, as considerable interest is being taken, and the displays will be comprehensive. The show will be continued all week.

A public meeting was held at Alberni last week to discuss the question of salmon fisheries. The run there is getting less, and the use of purse seines in the canal was protested against. A resolution was passed urging the Dominion Government to make provision for a hatchery at Alberni, and also to see that there are no obstructions in the Somass river that will prevent the fish from reaching spawning grounds.

SASKATOON.

October 12.—The contract for the new warehouse for the Rogers Fruit Co. has been let at the price of $11,500. Work on the site is now under way. The company expect to occupy the building very soon.

The warehouse of J. F. Cairns has undergone considerable alterations. The front of the building has been fitted up with offices, showroom and packing-room for the better handling of goods in wholesale quantities. The basement has also been altered so that a bigger stock can be put in.

Wheat continues to pour in rapidly to the elevators at Asquith. Already about 60,000 bushels have been shipped from town. H. J. Cameron has now placed his stock of goods in his new store on Main Street. The foundation for the new flour mill is complete, and a quantity of lumber and machinery on the ground.

Stewart Bros., of Elstow, have moved their store from Railway Avenue to Main Street, where they expect to do a better business. They contemplate erecting a larger store in the spring as the present building has been found to be too small for the growing requirements of the business. A new flour and feed store is in course of erection for W. S. Taylor. A feed mill is being built by Mr. Dallas on Railway Avenue. W. McLaren, of Saskatoon, has opened a restaurant in the new town.

CHATHAM.

October 13.—A big revival in the work of the Chatham Retail Merchants' Association may be looked for a little over two weeks hence. On account of counter attractions in the shape of two political meetings, the regular monthly meeting of the retailers, scheduled to take place to-night, has been called off; but it is on the express understanding that the next meeting, immediately after the conclusion of the campaign, is to be a "hummer." There will probably be quite a few important subjects up for discussion, while it is intended to secure a prominent outside speaker to address the association on some subject of interest to retailers. Difficulty has been experienced in the past in finding a meeting night on which all the active members could attend. As a remedy, it has been suggested to hold fortnightly instead of monthly meetings. The theory is that the merchants who can't turn out one night will be able to do so the other, and, though all may not be able to follow the routine business, all will be able to secure the benefits resulting from heart to heart talks with fellow tradesmen on subjects of mutual interest. Furthermore, with frequent meetings it is not only easier to interest a larger number, but easier to maintain the interest of all.

One grocer stated to-day that Saturday's business was the best he had experienced in a long time. Though all don't agree on this, it is the consensus of opinion that business has immensely improved, and that the trend will continue upward. Good crops are reported from all parts of the county.

Victoria Avenue, which vies with the west end as a home of fashionable aristocracy, has at last a grocery. Mr. Anderson, formerly of Howard Township, who for the past 18 months has been conducting Wm. Sharpe's grocery on VanAllen Avenue, is the proprietor of the new business, a dwelling house near the corner of Grand and Victoria Avenues having been remodeled into a handsome brick store. Mr. Anderson states that business has been very good. There is no competition within less than two blocks in any direction.

D. J. O'Keeffe, of the Triangle grocery, who injured himself while unloading some goods about three weeks ago, is able to be out again, after an extended siege.

H. A. Andrew has installed a Huber account system in his grocery.

The Bradley store has taken advantage of the intense interest here in the world's championship baseball series to bulletin the results in front of the store as they are received over the wire.

A prettily lighted front on Saturday nights is that of J. H. Kadwell, the Grand Avenue grocer. Mr. Kadwell uses natural gas, and the beautifully diffused light, combined with the tasty appearance of the front makes a striking effect, which has excited much comment.

Blenheim merchants have given notice that after October 15 they will shut up shop at 8 o'clock on Tuesdays and Thursdays. The growth among merchants in outside towns of what might be called "partial early closing"—closing two or three nights a week, is a striking feature of the past year.

BRACEBRIDGE.

Oct. 13.—Trade in this busy centre has been very brisk in spite of the cry of hard times. Business from the lakes and among the farmers being unusually good.

Miss Sheppard, of Toronto, Cowan's Cocoa demonstrator, had the main counter in Hutchison Bros. store during fair week.

Will Kirk, of Kirk Bros., is spending this week in the city and other places enjoying a well-earned holiday.

It is rumored that one of our merchants will soon enter the matrimonial arena. Watch for events.

Butter and eggs in this district seem very scarce. One thing that is hard to understand is why our merchants keep sending south for these goods with so many good farms around us. The chicken trade is very heavy, farmers going into it with a vim, yet we have a scarcity of eggs continually before us. Why is it?

An announcement that is pleasing to hear is that Hutchison Bros. have decided to institute the cash system after December 1st. This is a move in the right direction and we trust others will follow.

Robt. Armstrong, of Armstrong & Gillespie, is on the sick list.

People in town last week sustained a heavy shock in the death of W. J. Leeder, one of our prominent grocers. Mr. Leeder, who had a bright future before him, was stricken with typhoid fever. His progress towards recovery seemed bright when a relapse carried him to the great beyond. A beautiful wreath presented by his fellow merchants, showed the high esteem in which he was held among the business men.

Our annual fall fair proved a bigger success than ever, farmers making attractive displays, that showed credit in the undertaking. One instance was in honey. A remarkable showing was made in this particular line. At a glance in the different stores one can see rich displays of the goods all marked "Muskoka Made."

GALT.

October 13.—The Y.M.C.A. of Galt has hit upon a novel way of advertising its campaign to raise $2,200 to free the institution from debt. Every merchant advertising in the Reporter was canvassed with the request that he give his usual space in one day's issue to the association. A large number of merchants responded, among them the grocers, and on Saturday last the letters "Y.M.C.A." were prominently displayed on every page of the paper. The firm's signature was attached to every advertisement, but other than that there was nothing in the ads beyond the Y.M.C.A. announcements. That the scheme was successful is evident from the large sum realized by this unique method of setting forth the needs of a worthy institution.

Saturday last saw the biggest market in the history of Galt. For some time the attendance has been on the increase, but it was not until Saturday that all previous records were broken. The market building was not large enough to accommodate the butter, eggs, and poultry, while the outside display was an eye-opener. The success of the market is due, so says the Market Clerk, to one fact alone, and that is that the housewives of Galt are on hand every Saturday morning, and that the farmers have no difficulty in disposing of their produce. Eggs and butter have both advanced in price within the past month. The former has jumped from 20 to 27 cents, and the latter from 22 to 27 cents per pound. Shortage in supply is held responsible for the advance in eggs, while the failure of the pasturage is held responsible for the butter increase.

The announcement that Galt has decided to enter into the Good Roads system, was received with pleasure by Galt merchants. By this system the Government bears one-third the expense of macadamizing roads leading from the county into the town. St. Andrew's Road, a thoroughfare much traveled by North Dumfries farmers, will be macadamized at once, as this road becomes impassable in bad weather and prevented a large number of farmers from coming to town, its improvement will be a direct benefit to the grocers.

It is a common thing in Galt to see a groceryman dodging into a stationer's, or vice versa, and the reason for this performance is not hard to find. The merchants are on opposite sides of the political fence, and when the grocer thinks of a particular telling fact against his neighbor's party, he immediately visits the stationer and confronts him with the argument, and to reply necessitates a return visit. The outcome of the election is eagerly awaited by Main Street merchants, as the man on the winning side is expected to give a speech from the third-storey of his establishment. As a grocer correspondent states that a business man's politics may interfere with his business, the names of the political spellbinders are withheld.

Business in Galt has been exceptionally good during the past week, with every prospect of a record in the grocery business for the month of October.

"The sale of brown sugar," said a local grocer to your correspondent, "will, I fear, soon be a thing of the past. For a long time a number of people stuck by the old-time favorite, but gradually these have come to recognize the granulated article as the one and only. Then, for a time, there was a demand for the brown article for taffy making, but in this also the granulated is surely becoming the favorite. It seems that the once popular stand-by is being conspired against on every hand, and that within the next few years it will be an almost forgotten article.

INGERSOLL.

October 13.—It is doubtful if any town in Canada enjoys a steadier trade throughout the week than Ingersoll. It is well-known that many towns look forward to Saturdays to swell the receipts and furnish the profits. Ingersoll is a town of which its citizens and merchants are alike justly proud. Surrounded by the finest agricultural land that can be found anywhere it is patronized by a moneyed class of people who invariably give more attention to quality than to price. Then again the large factory of the St. Charles Condensing Company, to which upwards of a hundred thousand pounds of milk are delivered daily during the "flush" season is an important factor in the steady trade which the merchants enjoy, and which placed Ingersoll above the plane of "a Saturday town." On account of the factory of the St. Charles Condensing Co. many farmers within a radius of ten miles come to town daily with their supply of milk. This means that they do their buying daily, instead of once or twice a week, as was the case and is the case at the present time with the majority of towns. They also buy more freely than was formerly their custom. This is explained by the fact that the more frequently they come to town the greater is the temptation to buy. Everyone knows how hard it is to pass by some favorite fruit, candy or table requisite. The result has been that the country people are from day to day being brought in contact with the varied articles offered for sale in the town, and they are consequently spending more money. Saturday, however, is always a very busy day.

While it has been said that the apple crop this season has been a plentiful one, and the quality probably as good as the average, your correspondent has been informed by a gentleman engaged in shipping that the winter varieties are considerably below the quality of the early fruit. The protracted drought and hot weather affected the apples seriously. It caused certain varieties to wither to some extent, while, as a rule, they are much wormier than in other seasons. In many instances the Spies, one of the finest of Canadian apples, is not as red and tempting. This defect is said to be due to the excessively hot and dry weather.

KINGSTON.

October 13.—The fall has arrived again and there is something charming about autumn, yet sad, for everything seems to be dying except politics. All this suggests to me the great army of travelers who come in every few weeks. Oh, how many dear knights of the grip are lying beneath the autumn leaves, grips, samples, raincoats, furcoats, all left behind. W. C. Darby, heard the bugle call and expired suddenly in a shop on Princess Street last week. He was connected with the grocery trade for many years, was an accomplished bookkeeper and worked for a long time in R. J. Colson's wholesale grocery here. He was genial and well thought of.

A great many buildings are in course of erection, and very few idle men are seen lounging on corners, except the class who do not want work. They are always with us, generally direct imports. One of our leading wholesale grocers intends putting up a fine structure of cement this season.

Larry Murphy, the genial grocer and cheese exporter, after careful consideration and selection, decided to take unto himself a fair partner for life. Yes, it's true this time, and from the number of handshakes on the market it is quite evident all are satisfied he did right.

John Bennett, clerk in Kelley Bros.' grocery, met with an accident recently which will cause uneasiness for a few weeks. Oh, he went too far and the bacon slicer did the rest. For further information ask Jim McCulla, of the Belfast tea house.

Jim the grocer said he got a shipment of California peaches last week and no previous lot equalled them in appearance. They were fine in color, shape and size, and the taste—well, oh, wait, the telephone is ringing. Canadian fruits Canadian's suits, when it comes right down 2-8.

The wholesale man met me on a corner lately and we had a talk. He said: "I have made a success of my business by daily attention to details, buying from reliable houses whose names generally appear in trade journals. I have watched the rise and fall of many a retailer in my day, and I tell you the curse of to-day—trading stamps." Said I: "Yes, they are bad enough, but they are dying fast." What I was going to say was over buying and under selling. If the retail men would work together, and keep on friendly terms they would all get rich and be happy again. The grocer who cuts and buys cheap goods can get knocked out in three rounds by the man who buys and sells a better article and gets his price.

I will never forget an item I read in The Grocer about 10 years ago. A grocer in the West said: "I am going to do half the business this year I did last year, and increase my bank account." And there is a lot in it.

We are forced to handle sugar here for about 5c on a 100, and the retailers are not all to blame. We have to compete against wholesale houses.

W. G. Craig & Co. have the agency in these parts for Lea's pickles, and samples are A1. The firm increase their sales with an ad in The Grocer.

The butter market is nervous, and prices are on the climb. Creamery is retailing at 30c and No. 2 at 27c and 28c. Dairy at 26c.

A square circular sent to new-comers telling them yours is the only safe place to buy table wants, sometimes has a good effect. Try it.

The contention of Messrs. Stuebing & Son, Berlin, re fruit jars and boxes, as in last week's Grocer, is quite as they represented it. Retailers sell at a small profit and every jar with a nick in it is brought back. I think the railways should be held responsible for rough handling of goods. The retailer cannot see the breakage in a lot of goods at the time he is signing and accepting the freight bill.

Some houses are good enough to credit you with any small breakage. I think the only way is for the glass manufacturers to do like the market gardeners, give 13 cans to the dozen. The other remedy is to get a better profit and sign the freight bills under protest of breakage, if any.

The carload of potatoes lately received here are of the cobbler variety, good cookers, but ragged, thin, half-peeled coats, unfit for storage. We are looking for a better variety next lot. Delawares are favorites.

The early closing of stores here is kept by many, but there are still some who are willing to enter the slave market and work thirteen hours a day, while other trades close up and go out and enjoy life.

What profit is it to a man if he make a sugar barrel of money and is too miserable to enjoy it?

WOODSTOCK.

October 13.—The trade in fruit here this season has been very large. Almost every day one may see the express wagons loaded with baskets piled high, for grocers and fruit dealers. Peaches and grapes have been in great demand and apparently there has been no scarcity of the supply, and the quality has been good. Grapes are still coming in in large quantities, though the peach shipments are falling off. The one regrettable feature about this business is in the fact that at most stores, baskets are piled up high outside the stores, were they are at the mercy of disease-laden dust from the streets, and of wandering canines. It is safe to say that most people would much prefer dealing with a place of business where goods are kept inside and in as sanitary a condition as is possible.

Considerable difficulty was found here this year, in securing sufficient glass jars to satisfy the demand. Early in the canning season they were plentiful enough, but, later on, when the peaches began to come, they became scarce, and dealers raised the price very considerably, which was not appreciated by buyers as they consider that they are required to pay sufficient at all times. It is a question, what becomes of all the jars? Hundreds of dozens are sold in every town year after year, and where the population is not increasing very fast, one has to believe that most of these are bought to replace broken ones. It is a question that many have considered, "Where do the jars go to?"

Grocers are beginning to get in their stocks of canned goods for the winter. While there are some people who refuse to have anything to do with anything eatable that is put up in cans, yet most realize that cleanly habits and surroundings prevail generally in the factories, and that fruits, meats, etc., are in most cases as good as if preserved under the eye of the consumer.

A new flour and feed store is announced to open in Woodstock shortly. Two new restaurants have recently opened for business, one under Chinese management.

ST. THOMAS.

October 13.—Both markets were large last Saturday and the collector took in $17 on the east, or Norton, market alone. Butter still continues scarce and eggs likewise, 28c for the former and 25c for the latter.

Some of the farmers, rather than sell their potatoes for a dollar per bag, the average price, took them home again. The bringing to the city by the different grocers of carloads weakened the market considerably, as predicted, and the people are reaping the benefit of their enterprise.

Chestnuts are plentiful in this vicinity and sold as low as 10c per quart. The recent frosts have put an end to the supply of cucumbers and tomatoes. Apples are a drug on the market, some of the finest selling at 50c per bag.

Geo. R. Rinn, the St. Catherine St. grocer, was taken to the hospital on Saturday suffering from an attack of incipient typhoid fever.

Police Magistrate Glenn heard the remaining evidence in the thrice remanded case of Hiram F. Burgess and Frank Elliot, who were charged by Inspector Shaw with violating the transient traders' and peddlers' by-law for years past. Burgess admitted peddling without a license, but objected through his counsel, Mr. Cameron, that the fees were excessive and prohibitory. On these objections the magistrate reserved judgment for another week. It seems very unfair to the merchants who are obliged to pay a business tax to have this peddling allowed by the authorities.

Although we are in the midst of an important election campaign at the present time, there seems to be no excitement whatever, and business is not at all interfered with and goes smoothly along. This is as it ought to be and shows the good sense of the people, and the business men in particular.

Our city is experiencing the novelty of free mail delivery, which was inaugurated last week, and will save a lot of time for the grocers, especially those located a distance from the post office. We should have had it years ago, but it is better late than never and we are thankful.

The past fruit season has not been as profitable to grocers as in former years, owing to the fact that there are so many Italians, Greeks and Syrians engaged in the fruit business. No less than six new stands opened up this year in that line and there are more to follow, and the strange part of it is that the best trade patronize them.

The coming of the M.C.R. pay checks on Saturday made it a very busy day and it was Sunday morning before the boys got through delivering. It is years since the pay checks came on Saturday, and it is to be hoped that it will be some time before it occurs again, although their arrival is most welcome. The Lord's Day Alliance might take this matter up and preach the necessity of the public doing their ordering a little earlier in the day and avoid making slaves of the grocers and their drivers and enable them to attend divine worship on Sunday morning like other people.

There is a noticeable improvement in the dressing of the leading grocers' windows since the advent of cool weather, and nothing attracts more than a clean, neatly-dressed, well-lighted front. It is necessary to use judgment in the kind of goods displayed, as some are ruined by the exposure, and it is a mistake to have too much variety as the people do not have time to take it all in, and the idea is to attract their attention and make a favorable impression and thus ultimately make a customer. Very few of the grocers have any display outside on the sidewalk, as formerly, on account of sanitary reasons, dogs and dust —thus necessitating more frequent changes in the window displays, and avoiding a lot of work putting the goods out in the morning and again taking them in at night.

ST. CATHARINES.

October 13.—Wm. Richardson has secured the stock and fixtures of the Paris Kandy Kitchen for $750. Mr. Richardson is an experienced candy maker and will continue the business for the next few months at least.

Representatives of S. H. Knox & Co. were in the city recently looking for a desirable site for a 5, 10 and 15-cent store. An option was secured on two stores in the heart of the business section, but the purchase has not been completed. On one store the present tenant has a lease that will not expire for seven months. This may prove a stumbling block, as it is understood the Knox Co. desire immediate possession.

The Hedley Shaw Milling Co. are issuing circulars to their patrons stating that in future all wheat brought to the mill to exchange for flour will be purchased at a stated price and the flour desired sold at their regular prices. The flour will be sold in the original package only. This move will be beneficial to the grocers. Many farmers were always of the opinion that by trading their wheat for flour at the mill they secured the flour at the same price as the grocer paid wholesale. Now the farmer will be able to purchase flour from the grocer at the same price he pays at the mill. While the margin is not large it will help to swell the grocers' gross profits.

Trade excursions are the topic of the hour among the larger stores of the city. All trades are interested. This city has seen much trade that used to come here diverted to other centres during the past few years and lack of transportation facilities seemed to make it impossible to prevent. With the extension of the Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto Railway Co. to Fonthill and Welland the merchants began to plan how to regain their lost ground. McLaren & Co., Limited, proved to be the most aggressive. They held an excursion from Welland at 5c return, and from Niagara Falls at 15c return. Both these excursions were so successful that they are repeating the excursion from Welland Thursday of this week. Now the Board of Trade has taken up the matter, and a meeting of the retail section was held Monday night to form plans for at least three trade excursions from various points, to be held before the Christmas rush begins. A committee was appointed to secure railway rates from the various railroads over which it is proposed to run the excursions. Each store will be asked to contribute to the fund to defray the expenses of these excursions. The amounts will vary according to the benefits each store expects to derive. The merchants here believe that in these trade excursions they have found the solution of the problem of winning back some of the trade that at present goes to Hamilton and Toronto. Results will tell.

Fresh eggs and dairy butter were both quite scarce on the market here Saturday. Eggs retailed from 27c to 30c, while butter was 28c to 30c. The grocers are now depending largely upon creamery butter to supply their trade.

Michael Kane, one of the veterans of the grocery business in this city died here October 1. Mr. Kane had been proprietor of the Park Grocery for the past twelve years. While this store was known as a corner grocery yet the proprietor built up a business which, as he stated to a traveler friend some time before he died, gave him a profit of about $1,000 a year over and above all expenses. Mr. Kane had met with success in groceries earlier in life, but through bad investments had lost everything. His early success came when he was engaged in business on a large scale. His final success was from a small business. His is but one example of many that there is money to be made in groceries providing close attention is paid to details, costs and profits.

Several farmers in this district have purchased a carload of potatoes and are now offering the same for sale on the market as a substitute for home-grown potatoes.

Your correspondent noticed in your columns last week that the grocers of British Columbia were not satisfied with the margin of profit on creamery butter, namely five cents per pound. Judging from butter profits here they should consider themselves very fortunate. Profits here average from one to three cents per pound. Even this is gross profit, from which allowances for any off flavor and bad debts must be taken. I venture to say that the average grocer in this district buys and sells butter at a loss. This should not be. Butter is an item that should pay its margin of profit the same as other staples. Do you accomplish this?

PETERBORO.

Oct. 13.—A display of fresh meats in one of the windows of A. E. Talbot's "Delicatessen" store is attracting attention this week by the dainty manner in which it has been arranged. The various cuts of fresh pork, lamb and beef are set in a pretty trellis work which is relieved with rosettes. The window-dresser was Thos. Goselin, an employe in Talbot's meat and grocery store.

R. C. Braund and J. T. Braund, local general merchants, were in Oshawa last week attending the funeral of their mother, Mrs. Joseph Braund, who died after a year's illness, from a paralytic stroke.

Honedry Bros., exporters of French peas, have installed a new chopping mill in their establishment and are manufacturing flour and feed for the local merchants.

The creditors of J. V. A. Coon, general merchant, Havelock, who assigned a short time ago, held a meeting in Toronto last week and settled up the estate. Mr. Coon made the assignment as the result of a serious fire. His assets were found to be $11 335 and his liabilities about $12,190. The stock was turned over to Mrs. Coon by the creditors at 60 cents on the dollar.

Butter and eggs have gone up in price in Peterboro. Butter is selling in the market at 30 cents per lb. and eggs at 25 cents.

The retail merchants of the city are complaining that collections have been below the average during the past week. In fact, a local grocer stated that they had not been so slow for a year. He did not believe, however, that such a condition of affairs would last as the times appear to be growing brighter with the knowledge of a splendid harvest.

J. W. Byers, general merchant and postmaster at Byersville in the west end of the city, has found that the increase in his business during the last year has warranted the erection of larger premises. He previously kept his store in one corner of his dwelling but he is now erecting a new addition for a store on the same property.

Another general merchant in Peterboro who has had a good business year is N. Routley, corner of Park and Brock Streets. He is erecting a large addition to his store which will be completed by next month. He intends keeping a larger and more varied stock.

E. F. Mason, grocer, is this week conducting a popular guessing contest. He has dressed his window with Richard's pure soap, the central feature being an immense cake of that brand. The person guessing the closest to the weight of the piece of soap will be presented with a gold watch which also occupies a prominent position in the window.

The end of the fruit season here is almost in sight. Pears have disappeared and nothing but a few late peaches remain. Grapes are now the principal fruit sold. A large number of the local grocers who deal in fruit buy quantities of grapes from the surrounding district. Most of them, however, are imported. Cranberries have made their appearance once again. The best quality is selling at 15 cents per quart.

W. J. Routley is instaling several new shelves and remodelling the interior of his grocery store on Charlotte St. preparatory to increasing his stock.

LONDON.

October 13.—Wholesale and retail trade continues fair, the latter being unusually brisk on Saturday last.

Eggs and butter keep well up in price. A drop in the prices of both in the Spring caused many to hope for a return to something like the popular figures of years gone by, but the downward movement had scarcely got well on its way before a reaction set in and ever since the tendency has been upward until now prices are back near the top again.

Last week's days of ten cents in sugar came too late to be of real value to housekeepers, the preserving season being over, and "they did it on purpose" is a common phrase among housewives just now.

The canning factories may find before long that their business, so far as tomatoes are concerned, is falling off. Housewives are learning the secret of canning those luscious vegetables and it is quite common to find them putting up, or down, from twenty to a hundred or more cans. The idea prevails that once the secret of the process is learned home-canned stuff is much better than what the canners sell, people believing they can better depend on what is done by themselves than that provided by the factories. Besides, some people view with suspicion the tin cans and are convinced that glass jars are much better and less dangerous to health.

A party of local retail grocers, consisting of President Thos. Shaw, of the Retail Grocers' Association; Treasurer Ed. Ryan, E. E. Linnell and J. H. Wildey, accompanied by M. Millman, of Elliott, Marr & Co., W. Ripley, of M. Masuret & Co., drove out to Delaware Fair on Wednesday night and had a most enjoyable time. They saw the sights, made some purchases of prize exhibits and on the way home enjoyed a duck supper which had been prepared for them at Lobo Village. Mr. Shaw bought the prize home-made bread, but on the way back to the city, as one of the party expressed it, "had it eaten on him." Mr. Linnell was permitted to retain the prize pumpkins he had purchased, and they are now for sale at his store in the East End.

It is doubtful if any trade contains more baseball enthusiasts than do the grocers. Not an outing occurs during the summer, and there are many of them, but a baseball match forms a leading feature of the day's programme. It is not surprising, therefore, to find a goodly number of grocery men among the crowd who are taking in the world's championship games at Detroit this week, to which city excursions are being run.

Little is heard these days of price-cutting among local retailers. What few isolated cases there have been this Summer have been investigated by the association and the invariable result has been to bring the offending parties to their senses. This is but one of the advantages of organization in the trade and a course which should be followed by the grocers of every city of the Dominion. Throat-cutting is one of the worst features of business life and this an organization like the London Retail Grocers' Association reduces to a minimum.

BARRIE.

October 13.—Budd & Company, of the Sixth Ward, are moving this week from the old Looker Block to one of Dollery's stores, and have now one of the best stores in that ward.

Mrs. S. Metcalf has decided to retire from the grocery business and is selling her stock of groceries out privately.

John Speers, one of Barrie's old grocery boys, was married last week here to Miss L. Cunningham. Mr. and Mrs. Speers will reside in Sault Ste. Marie, where Jack is one of the leading business men. Barrie friends wish the happy couple all kinds of congratulations.

The prices of fowl in general took a drop on Saturday. Spring chickens that have been selling at 12 and 12½c a pound sold at 10c. Hens sold at 6c to 8c; ducks at 10c, and turkeys at 13c lb.

BELLEVILLE.

Oct. 13.—Both the retail and wholesale grocery trade in this city, as far as the fall has progressed, is very satisfactory, judging from the reports given your correspondent here and the best of all is the optimistic outlook they all hold for the future fall trade. This is due principally to the amount of labor going on in the city and vicinity this fall and winter. The grocers say, and in fact it is well known, that when labor is well employed the grocery man and the butcher are the first to feel the benefit.

The starting of the horseshoe department of the rolling mills recently destroyed by fire has just resumed work, the Lehigh Portland Cement Works are running night and day and so are the Belleville Cement Works. These three concerns employ about 1,000 men and all their groceries are bought in Belleville. The two cement plants are three and six miles distant from the city, therefore it is no wonder the agitation for an electric road is being so strongly advocated to connect these industries with the city. Already many of the employees are buying property and building houses in the vicinity of the works as the expense at present is considerable in going to and from their work. The grocers will proabbly be the biggest losers if grocery stores of any dimensions are started up there. Already a number of small ones have made the plunge. The suggestion is here handed out that some of the live grocers get busy with the Board of Trade. There is too much of this waiting for the other to take the initiative. Alderman Panter, chairman of the Public Works Department, is a member of the oldest grocery firm in Belleville. Here is the opportunity to make a name for himself. Alderman Panter is a candidate for the mayoralty this year.

The Niagara fruits this year were just as popular as ever and met with large sales, but, of course, they are now about over. One thing the dealers here complain about, but not so much as the buyers, is that people who go from here to Toronto during Exhibition time always come back with the same old story. Just the same kind of peaches, put up in the same way and size that are sold in all the stores in Toronto at 50c and 60c the basket sell for 90c and $1 here. Is it any wonder that nearly every feminine visitor—the married ones we mean—always has her husband bring back a couple of baskets? Of course that may be the cheaper varieties but the Belleville grocers have long ago learned that only the best is good enough here. Talking about fruit, though, this district has got them all beaten in the ways of apples. They are coming in very freely and if any of The Canadian Grocers' readers ever see any brands of apples marked Bay of Quinte district that is all that is necessary to prove them about the best ever.

Potatoes the late ones especially, are a fine crop, far larger than last year. They are of a specially fine quality and are selling on the market here at 75c to $1 a bag. One prominent grocer on Saturday purchased 150 bags at 75c.

Eggs are very scarce and have been for some time and the outlook is for higher prices owing to coming cold weather. It is years since eggs were as high in price during summer months as the past season. No one can explain the reason.

Butter has also been high in price all summer. This is explained by the great drought experienced in this county and district during the summer. Now that some of the cheese factories are beginning to close the price is expected to drop at least a little. The grocers hope so and so do the consumers.

We don't like to admit the fact but the pickle travelers may be disappointed this year when they come along. In this district there has been an abundance of all sorts of pickling vegetables, such as cucumbers, tomatoes, cauliflowers.

The local canners are making deliveries to the retail trade, of this season's canning. Corn, tomatoes and peas have been a splendid output. early this spring the travelers promised retail dealers they could not guarantee over sixty per cent. of the orders owing to the poor outlook but on their arrivals this month almost every order has been filled to the limit. Canning factories in Hastings and Prince Edward, two of the principal canning counties in Ontario, promised to fill all orders. They are all now busy with pumpkins and they are coming in in loads. The retail trade will know where to get canned pumpkins.

LIPTON'S WINDOW-DRESSING COMPETITION.

Prize-Winners in the Recent Contest—Some Splendid Windows.

A great deal of interest has been manifest among Toronto grocers since the latter part of August in the Lipton window-dressing competition, which was inaugurated just previous to Exhibition time, and during the time of the fair a large number of windows in and about the city were dressed with Lipton products in accordance with the terms of the competition.

The result of the contest as decided by the judges, is announced herewith.

The first prize, $100, goes to W. H. Armitage, Church and Carlton Sts., for the splendid window illustrated on this page.

The second prize, $50, went to H. Hope, 292 Queen St. west.

The third prize, $25, was won by a window submitted by J. M. Cork, 459 College St.

The fifteen other prizes of $5 each were awarded to the following grocers. In regard to these latter prizes it should be understood that they are not given in order of merit, but rather in the order in which they were sent to the judges:

J. Cake, 1210 Dufferin St.; J. Blood, 419 Yonge St.; H. G. MacDonald, 223 Sorauren Ave.; R. Hickman, 1406 Queen St. west; Harry Horne, Arthur and Bellwoods Sts.; J. H. Rowntree, 295 West Toronto; E. T. Tilly, 129 Augusta St., window dressed by G. M. Dent; Mrs. T. Scott, 182 Berkeley St.; S. Bone, 212 Davenport Road; Wm. Greaves, College and Clinton Sts.; McCann & MacKay, 118 Dundas St.; Bruce & Sanderson, 377 Parliament St.; E. Cork, 202 Davenport Road; John Hickman, 374 College St.; H. M. Connor, 402 Spadina Ave.

TIME TO PUSH COLLECTIONS.

Now that the farmers have realized considerable on the magnificent crops they have harvested this year. it should be the aim of the live merchant to see that the cash secured goes to pay accounts due for supplies, rather than being deposited in the savings bank to earn interest for the farmer at the expense of the merchant.

The bank managers can be relied on to look after their interests by encouraging their farmer customers to turn their cheques over to savings accounts rather than cashing them to pay liabilities incurred during the past year. That is the business of the bank manager, just as it should be the business of the merchant to gather in every cent due him and refuse credit to every customer who can pay but won't.

Too many farmers and workingmen run credit accounts with their local merchants while letting money lie to their credit in the savings banks. And, likewise, too many send cash for goods from the city mail order houses while running credit accounts at home. The best antidote for both of these evils is for the merchant to be a persistent collector and not to hesitate to talk plain when occasion demands. When a customer is refused credit he may become sore, but he is pretty certain to come back before long—especially when the cash dealer has some particularly good value to offer to cash buyers.

Whatever the plan used by merchants to collect overdue accounts, and there are many good ones, it is timely to use them to the limit as there is likely to be a few dull months during the winter. Business is undoubtedly recovering, but it will take some time for it to get back to its normal condition.

For the merchant who would like to and yet cannot quite see his way clear to adopt a strictly cash business, a system of collecting accounts monthly will be of decided advantage. This plan includes several of the advantages of the cash system without some of its disadvantages and it will serve, also, as a means of readily working into a cash business. The system has over and over again proved itself well adapted both to large and small businesses and is undoubtedly an almost ideal one for the retail grocer who feels that he must extend some credit.

SATISFACTORY TRADE INDICATIONS.

Trade conditions are steadily improving in Canada, One of the best evidences of this is the clearing house returns. These have been growing for some weeks. As a trade barometer there is nothing more reliable than the clearing house returns. Where they steadily rise it is an indication of a larger movement of merchandise.

The increase in the bank clearings last month was a little over 9 per cent., while at the end of the second week in October the gain over the same period a year ago was nearly 11 per cent. Winnipeg showed the remarkable gain of 38.4 per cent.

Another favorable trade barometer which reads more favorably than it did is the railway earnings, which are more satisfactory than they have been for twelve months.

Trade is not booming; nor are we likely to see it boom for some time. But the tide has ceased to ebb, and although it is far from the flood, it is heading that way.

In the factories of the country work is approaching the normal, and while the orders coming to the wholesale houses are not large they are more numerous than they were.

There is a general indisposition on the part of all branches of trade to anticipate requirements. Although money is more plentiful and cheaper, conservatism is still a strong influence in business. And it is well that it should be.

Although Canada has been blessed with such bountiful crops for which prices rule good, only a comparatively small part of them has been exchanged for cash. This is particularly true of the crops in the Northwest, where the farmer in many instances has to wait for the greater part of his money until after the grain is in the elevators at the head of Lake Superior.

But he will get it all in time, for the farmer, unlike the manufacturer and the merchant, can always find a market for that which he wants to sell.

The good times are coming; but in the meantime the past due accounts are heavy. To lighten them will require a great deal of money which the realization on the crops will put into circulation. The prospects for this being done are of the brightest, but for the present business men will be wise to continue sailing fairly close to the wind, looking closely after their collections, keeping their stocks healthy and promptly liquidating their liabilities.

A BOOM FOR CANADIAN POTATOES.

Potatoes are developing in interest among vegetables at the present time. Many sections of the American continent have gone short on this year's crop. While there is no famine, crops are below the normal in many places, which promised a good yield earlier in the season. At first the South, and then the Middle West, complained of the lack of supplies. Parts of the country where potatoes were grown for outside markets had none to export, and, in some cases, they were forced to buy in surrounding centres potatoes for local consumption. The latest complaint comes from the East, and is, perhaps, the most interesting situation that has yet developed. It is interesting up here in Canada, because it affects the Canadian markets and the Canadian potatoes.

New England, which supplies the great cities of the East, has this year a crop below a normal yield, and with the single exception of Aroostook County, in Maine, which has one of the largest and finest crops of potatoes in its history, is itself looking for outside potatoes. Boston, New York and Philadelphia are buying in far-away fields, and even Cleveland has been buying stocks away down east. New York State has about a normal yield, but is unable to supply outside points. These facts have sent potato men scurrying to places where yields are reported good. One of these places is New Brunswick, where is grown a splendid sample of the Delaware variety. This year the crop is a large one, so much so that up to this week New Brunswick Delawares were shipped as far west as Toronto, where they sold at the same price as natives. Being of smoother skin and of lighter color, the New Brunswicks were much preferred to the Ontario variety. Now, however, the Yankees have been swarming into New Brunswick centres and growers in the East have been asking high prices in the Western markets. This caused a cessation in demand, and gave Ontarios a chance to gain, for a time at least, the place they had lost in Toronto and Eastern Ontario markets. This, too, has enabled growers to get a more remunerative price in Western Ontario markets, where the New Brunswick Delawares were pressing rather sorely.

New Brunswick growers are doing good business with U. S. Atlantic ports, and are said to be realizing good returns. This will be good news to growers in other parts of Canada, and especially so to growers in Ontario, who, of late, have been raising a superior grade of the native Ontario potato. It will mean a better price for these men during this season, and, perhaps, open the way to larger markets in the future.

COMPLAINING OF EXPORT APPLES

The first reliable cables on which to base accurate information in regard to apples are being received, and in truth they are disquieting, to say the least. Liverpool reports Canadian apples arriving as being poor in quality and poorly packed. Cables to exporters say nearly all apples are of poor grade, but from American sources a great deal of the blame is laid at the door of Canadian apples, especially those from Nova Scotia. The prices obtained have been low, ranging from 7s to 9s a barrel at Liverpool. So far only the early varieties have been shipped, but Montreal is sending forward a great quantity of apples and it is supposed they are fall and winter stock. Great care should be taken with the packing, for what difference does it make whether the barrels are properly marked if the fruit arrives at its destination in poor condition? All the fruit marks in creation will not command a good price.

Not all the Canadian apples sent forward were poor, however. Some grades of good stock brought high prices. In fact, as one dealer expressed it, "Britain wants only high grade fruit, for which it is willing to pay a good figure." Some dissatisfaction is expressed with regard to United States apples, also. Those from the Hudson river valley are said to be worse than poor and the inspection at the port of export is said to be nil.

There is some little excuse in regard to apples from Montreal now being offered on the Liverpool market. A number of boats were detained in the St. Lawrence for days during the recent forest fires and of late, too, the Atlantic storms have been severe, necessitating the battening down of the hatches on ships. Undue heat has been generated in the holds, and with the tossing about of the vessels, it is small wonder that some of the apples were under grade when they reached their destination.

The complaint from Liverpool, however, is that not only "some" apples were "under grade," but that the great majority of the apples received were bad and unfit. From the wording of the cables, reliance is placed on the carrying out of the Dominion Fruits Marks Act, and on account of this, Canadian apples have an advantage over U. S. fruit. Last week Canada sent almost three times the quantity of apples to Britain that was shipped from U. S. ports, and if we are to keep the supremacy, care must be taken by grower, packer and exporter to send only good, sound fruit properly packed and in full accordance with the provisions of the act.

The fact that any other course will not pay is readily shown by a comparison of prices in Liverpool and Toronto. Liverpool market, on the stock sent, ranged from $1.75 to $2 a barrel, while in Toronto the quotations run all the way from $2 to $3 a barrel.

THE CASH SYSTEM THE IDEAL.

The fact that within the space of a comparatively few years a Canadian merchant had been able to amass such a fortune that at his death the province would gain through succession duties from his estate nearly half a million dollars is significant, to say the least, and is worth some consideration by merchants who are engaged in the making of a fortune, or if not that, gaining a competence. The late Timothy Eaton is referred to in the above sentence. It was he who left an estate valued at $5,250,000, all the result of his operations in the retail field in Toronto. The success of this merchant was due to the fact that he conducted an absolutely cash business.

Does not this impress one as a reasonable statement? As a matter of fact, it is one which cannot be controverted. Everyone knows that the man who sells for cash has money in hand. He can always take advantage of market conditions, or he can buy any line that is offered cheap. And because he pays cash, the wholesaler and manufacturer are always ready to let him know when they have goods that they are willing to part with at a reduced price.

Not only can he give those values that bring trade to his store, but he can make a fair profit out of the transaction. And, besides, his office makes a considerable profit out of the discounts his cash purchases earn.

The advantages of selling for cash are equally clear. Not only has the man who sells for cash turned the goods sold into ready money each day, but there are many times when he actually gets the purchase money and the profit out of the goods before the payment becomes due, and he has the use of that much more extra capital.

Intelligent customers of a retail store are not slow to appreciate the reasonableness of the statement that because a store sells for cash it is in a position to give better values, other things being equal. When a merchant gives credit it increases his expenses in many directions, and he has to mark a higher profit on the goods he sells in order to carry his credit customers. Now, the man who pays ready cash feels that this is not the square deal, and he very naturally objects to the paying of part of his neighbors' debts. Therefore, he does his trading with the house that buys and sells for cash.

It is the modern merchandizing method, and evidences are not lacking that grocers throughout Canada are appreciating more fully the desirability of its adoption and practice. No hard and fast rule can be adopted, of course, and local conditions do not always favor a cash system, but this is undoubtedly the tendency, and the successful merchant of the future will be the man who sells for cash.

POINTS TO REMEMBER.

Better sell a customer too little than too much. The man who buys too little will come back for more. The man you oversell may never come back.

It doesn't pay to recommend goods a bit higher than they will stand. A customer fooled that way once won't give you a second chance.

Just remember that people may think of the price while they are making the purchase, but they think of the quality when they are using the goods. Sell the highest possible quality every time.

Greet every customer as soon as he comes in. If you cannot wait on him at once, at least find out if possible what he wants so as not to keep him waiting needlessly.

Misrepresenting goods is taking chances with your reputation. There may be ways in which it is worth while to take chances, but never with your reputation.—Modern Grocer.

THE SITUATION IN THE WEST.

The Western Viewpoint, by our Special Correspondent.

Winnipeg, Oct. 13.—The settlement of the C.P.R. strike on Monday last was undoubtedly the sensation of the week. It was claimed that negotiations were being carried on between the company and the men through the Ministerial Association during the latter part of last week, but nothing came of it. On Sunday night in one of the city churches it was announced that the strike was over. On Monday morning Winnipeg got up to the news that the strike was called off, the men accepting the finding of the arbitration board. After two months' fighting they had accepted exactly what was offered to them at the beginning, only that they had lost all right to pensions, seniority, etc., and were obliged to apply individually for positions in the yards and shops. Hon. Colin H. Campbell, Attorney-General, and Hon. Robert Rogers, claim to have settled the strike, and from the moment the announcement was made until now there has been nothing but cross-firing on the part of the political parties and the men, although they have gone back to work, are thoroughly dissatisfied with the conduct of the strike, and there are all kinds of wars and rumors of wars on the tapis. To the general public the important thing is that the men have returned to work and this will mean a better equipment of rolling stock and a faster grain movement. The blockade in the country is really serious at some points at the present time, although the forward movement has been very large.

On October 6th the Western Grain Standards Board convened at Winnipeg for the purpose of selecting the commercial grades for the year. It was decided that inasmuch as the commercial grades fixed for 1907 had given general satisfaction that it would be wise to adhere as closely as possible to them this year, allowing for the difference in crop. The main difference was one of color, the exceptionally fine threshing weather having left even badly frozen grain a much better color than it was in 1907. A very large number of samples had been secured by Inspector Horn and these samples, which, of course, were none of them fit for the contract grades, gave very plain proof of what your correspondent has maintained all along, viz., that there was a very considerable amount of wheat damaged by either drought or frost this season. Another matter taken up by the board while in session was the need of a clearing house for off grades at Fort William. A number of representatives of terminal elevators appeared before the board and explained the crowding of the terminal elevators through the multiplication of grades of grain stored there. It was stated by one representative that last year in his elevator there has been stored 58 varieties of grain, being grades and sub-divisions of grades, and there were several sub-divisions of grades that they had been obliged to refuse for lack of room. The heavy loss of time in boats going from one elevator to another to load was brought out. A sub-committee appointed to look into this matter reported that it was not advisable to lessen the number of grades, but suggested that working arrangements might be made between the elevators whereby certain off grades of grain could be allotted to a particular elevator and all grain of those grades should be delivered to that particular elevator whether consigned there or not, and in this way the available storage room could be used to the full. It was further recommended that the various terminal elevators arrange among themselves for a clearing house system whereby a boat could get its full cargo at one elevator without going to three or four or even more to complete cargoes. To this end the chairman of the Western Grain Standards Board, G. R. Crowe, was requested to follow up this recommendation and to endeavor to get the elevators to agree on some form of clearing house arrangement. This recommendation from the Western Grain Standards Board is not a new one by any means. Negotiations looking to a clearing house in connection with the terminal elevators has been discussed at length from time to time. Indeed, at one time the arrangements for such clearing house system had been practically worked out, but in the end it came to nothing. Such an arrangement would mean an immense saving of time in getting cargoes out, the all-important matter before navigation closes.

The wheat market was fairly steady and very strong all week, with a slight falling off Saturday when the high prices brought out a considerable amount of long wheat. Exporters compla'n that prices are too high, but all week the wheat has been going somewhere, there being a very steady demand for cash wheat, more especially spot wheat, to fill boats for which contracts were made some time ago. Vessel agents report that few, if any, charters are being made for the end of this month, and when once the present lot of boats have been filled it is likely there may be a corresponding falling off in the demand for cash wheat. Receipts at Winnipeg for the week have averaged about 500 cars daily. Quite a number are coming in over the G.T.P., in fact, cars off that line have probably averaged 20 a day all week.

The live stock market is good. Receipts are heavy, but there has been no further depression of prices, in fact, on the whole, prices are a little stiffer than they were last week. Hogs are in very keen demand and receipts are comparatively light, as is natural during threshing and fall ploughing. Weather has been good all week for work of this kind and things are being pushed with vigor in order to be ready for the winter.

In real estate circles the most important happening for the week was the purchase by the Bank of Montreal of the property on corner of Portage Ave. E. and Main St. This property was formerly owned by the Permanent Mortgage Company, and a three-storey brick veneer building has occupied the site for years. It is considered one of the most valuable in the city. What the bank paid for the property is not known definitely but it is assured that they will erect a costly building on it in the very near future, a building that will cost from $400,000 to half a million. The property is situated on the east side of Main Street and owing to a jog in the street it will really face Portage Ave. W., and will certainly be one of the show places of the city. In real estate circles generally there is a very decided improvement in tone and inquiry and this purchase by Canada's most powerful bank just at this particular time has certainly added confidence to the real estate situation and greatly enhanced the value of the surrounding property. Real estate men report a steady demand for inside property and an increasing number of purchases.—H.

WATCH THE SMALL DETAILS.

Ordinary courtesy in correspondence is often neglected by otherwise progressive business men. An instance of this occurred recently. Three letters were written a large manufacturing firm on an important subject, but all were unanswered. Even a letter drawing attention to the neglect to reply and a request for attention failed to bring a reply. Finally the long-distance 'phone was used and in a couple of minutes the matter was straightened out. A dozen words to a stenographer, however, could have saved the trouble of telephoning.

Where neglect of ordinary business rules are thus overlooked, it is possible that other leakages occur. Orders may be lost and promptness in transacting other matters of business neglected. A careful watch should be kept on these small details by every business man and a rule adhered to that all business communications be attended to promptly.

QUEBEC MARKETS

POINTERS—

Montreal, October 15, 1908.

Fish—Advanced slightly.
Vegetables—Advanced.
Sugar—Declined.
Lard—Advanced.
Cheese—Declined.
Butter—Advanced.
Eggs—Firm.

The week has been a fairly good one in grocery and provision circles. The chief happening of interest since our last report is the decline in sugar. Large arrivals, and a failing demand, is responsible for the slump. Refiners have suddenly found themselves pretty well filled up with fresh stock, which has only recently arrived. There is some danger however of drought in the beet producing centres of Europe, which may make their stocks a good speculation. The canning season being finished, the demand has fallen off very largely. Dried fruits are not as active as they usually are at this time of the year. Buyers are holding back and do not seem to want to buy to arrive preferring to wait until the stock is on the spot.

Cheese is slightly weaker owing to a decline at country points. Butter is firmer, due to the smaller supplies arriving, and the active local demand. Butter is showing a surprisingly good quality, taking into consideration the emaciated condition of the pastures since the late drought. Eggs are in good demand and firm in price. There is a good trade passing in honey. Beans are not very active, owing to a scarcity of the domestic stock which has not begun to arrive in any quantity yet. Maple products and evaporated apples are very dull, still spices are not as active as they were last week, as the pickling season is nearly over. Tea remains practically as reported last week. Vegetables continue to go higher. Some varieties of fruit have advanced, whilst others have declined. Other lines remain practically the same as last week.

SUGAR—The sugar market dropped ten cents all around last week. This action resulted from the falling off in demand, and may be regarded as reactionary in character. Another factor which also assisted in the depression of prices was the fact that enormous supplies have arrived at refinery points just at a time when the demand was falling off. Reports arriving from Continental beet countries state a danger to the crops from drought. If unfavorable weather prevails at these points further advances will be made. Beets have been at a pretty low figure for some time, so that advances may be looked upon as a more logical sequence than a decline. Beets are now being reaped, and it is a little early to form any estimate of the probable results. It is, however, thought that the crop will, with favorable conditions, be about equal to last year's. The fact that abundant supplies have arrived in the United States of quite ample proportions to place them in a position independent of the European market, may give some steadiness to the market here for some time, if holders wish to keep it so. If speculators, however, regard the European market in a favorable condition to buoy up their operations, considerable fluctuation of a bullish character may be expected.

CANNED GOODS—This market is fairly active with good demand for canned fish and meats. Vegetables are in good demand, but fruits are much neglected.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES—In spite of high prices the demand for molasses continues good. The volume of business in this line coming from the country is exceptionally good. There has been considerable activity in the syrup market during the week. A strong preference has been displayed for the tinned goods. Prices have not shown any change during the week.

TEA—Locally the Japan market is showing more activity this week. In Japan the market is firmer with about ½ cent advance on quotations of a month ago. Ceylon blacks are somewhat active, whilst other lines of blacks are meeting with only an indifferent sale. Prices remain the same as last quoted.

COFFEE—There has been a good, steady demand during the week for coffee. For some time during the summer months there was a slight preference shown for the cheaper grades, but this has changed now and the preference seems to be for the better grades. This as one dealer explained was due to the fact that most people who have been away for the summer have now returned. Prices rule the same as at last week's quotation:

DRIED FRUITS—The dried fruit market is slightly quieter this week than last. There is not much activity in Valencia raisins. The cargo of a steamer to New York is due to arrive in Montreal about the middle of November. Currants are somewhat more active for stock on the spot. The demand is for cleaned, but orders are small in size and not large in volume.

Advices from New York state, with reference to currants: "The fruit received per steamer Eugenia has been largely cleared. The position on spot for the next few weeks is apparently a strong one, as the arrivals are apt to be very light until the 20th inst., when the steamer Clara is due with about 1,700 tons. The market on spot is firm at present quotations, which figures only work out at the actual cost of the fruit. Cleaned are moving more freely, although the demand is not normal by any means. The position in Greece, according to last reports, is unchanged, with growers who are in good financial position having obtained good prices for fruit during the past few years, holding out for full values." Cables from Smyrna during the week reported that the fig market there was very active and firm. The first small lot of new figs to reach this market arrived last week, another small lot is now due to be delivered. Opening quotations on new crop Persian dates, due to arrive here by first tide steamers late next month, are still withheld, but importers say that a good deal of business is being booked subject to approval of prices when named.

BEANS—There is an active inquiry especially from country points, but so far the amount of the new crop is so small that no orders of any magnitude can be filled. It is thought that when the new stock does arrive, business will be exceedingly active because the same reasons which have been previously indicated will prevail this winter, and, perhaps, to a greater extent. Austrian and Indian beans are somewhat neglected, as buyers are holding off for the new domestic stock. Quotations remain the same as at last report.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

POINTERS—

Sugar—Declined 10 cents on Oct. 8th.
Teas—Generally firmer.
Cheese—Easier.
Beans—Firm.
Collections—Fair.

Toronto, October 15, 1908.

Wholesalers are reporting a little more favorably this week on general business and conditions seem to be a little more active than a week ago. Undoubtedly retailers are not buying so freely as at this time last year, but wholesalers are adopting new methods of business and spurring on their travelers in such a way that the bulk of business, while the orders are of smaller size, promise to compare very favorably with business last year. Collections are fairly satisfactory, and judging by this, money, both among the retailers and their customers, is becoming at last a little easier.

The markets have remained pretty generally steady during the week, nothing of particular note having occurred since the decline in sugar on Thursday last. Considerable interest continues to be manifest in foreign and California dried fruits, though of course a good deal of these goods was bought some time ago.

SUGAR—The decline of 10 cents, the advance notes of which were given in last week's issue, came on Thursday, October 8, just after The Grocer had gone to press. St. Lawrence dropped 10 points on the Wednesday afternoon preceding, but the general decline did not occur till the following afternoon. Prices now ruling are as follows:

Paris lumps, in 50-lb. boxes	5 75
" in 100-lb. "	5 65
Paris lumps, 5-lb. boxes	0 35

No. 3 yellow	4 50
No. 2 "	4 40
No. 1 "	4 30

Granulated and yellow, 100-lb. bags 5c. less than bbls.

The decline was justified by an easier feeling in the markets, due mostly to the decreased demand since the close of the preserving season. Locally the market continues on about the same basis as at the time of the decline last week. Foreign markets, however, have been firming up during the week.

Willett & Gray, in reviewing the raw situation, say, in part: "The nominal quotation for Centrifugals has continued at 3.98c per lb., 96 degrees test, although efforts to sell Java sugars in port as low as 3.93c basis have failed, and three cargoes have gone into warehouse for account of their English owners. These sugars were not wanted by refiners at the moment, as their own imports are sufficient for their present requirements. It does not follow, however, that because there are no buyers at 3.93c for these cargoes, that the next sale will be on as low a basis, because these sugars are now out of the market, and a rise in Europe, which looks promising, may change the whole situation to a firmer basis.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES—Only a nominal business is being done, and no new features are evident. Prices are unchanged, as follows:

DRIED FRUITS—Retailers are buying somewhat freely though in small lots, considerable of this business was of course done on future and these goods are just now being delivered. Prices remain fairly steady in nearly all lines though there is an easier feeling in raisins. The Tabaristan, the first direct boat carrying dates, left Bussorah Bar Sept. 22 and is due to arrive in New York on Oct. 22. The second steamer is expected about three weeks later. SPICES—Business continues good, with no noticeable price changes. Retailers should be careful in buying any Singapore pepper. Advices received by local dealers during the week state that the goods have been almost impossible to secure for some time and satisfactory goods cannot be obtained at any price. BEANS—It was expected that the arrival of new crop beans would cause an easing off in the high prices which have been ruling since spring. The arrival of the first few cars did produce an easier feeling but the demand was so brisk and reports as to small crop so persistent that the market has firmed up again and now stands about as it did all summer. CANNED GOODS

There is little new to note in the situation this week, though business is very good in several lines of fruits. Most of these goods were bought, of course, some time ago, and stocks of some lines are just being shipped to the retailers now.

The trade continues to talk about the large pack of tomatoes made this year and reports from different sources lead to the conclusion that this year's pack will constitute something of a record. When this is considered, and also the fact that an unusually large amount of tomatoes were put up by housewives all over the country, the conclusion is reached that either there will have to be a largely increased consumption of these goods this year or there will be something doing with prices, already down pretty near the cost of packing, in the spring.

MANITOBA MARKETS

Business continues fairly brisk with an encouraging outlook for a good winter's business. Collections are better than they have been for some time, and the arrival of several lines of new goods is keeping things moving nicely.

CANNED GOODS—The market is pretty active at the low prices prevalent this year, and some little competition between the independent and the confederated companies has been evident at some points in the West. There are likely to be further developments a little later in the season.

REPORTS FROM VARIOUS CANADIAN CENTRES.

CHEESE AND BUTTER BULLETIN

Montreal, October 14, 1908.

Reports arriving from country points state that the pastures have recovered more quickly than was expected from the very burnt up condition they were in at the end of the dry weather. It is now thought that the production will be fairly good of both butter and cheese from now to the end of the season. This is, however, highly problematical, as the weather always is. From sources which are reliable, it is learned that in spite of the present high prices of butter there will be yet further advances. Some time ago large amounts went into storage for English account, and during the last week a large amount of this butter was shipped to Bristol, which has so far proved to be the best market for Canadian stock. During the past week fancy Townships stock has been offered, at the advanced rate, but these figures have not proved attractive to the English buyers, and owing to a good demand there, the houses which have had butter in storage on this side of the water have commenced to draw on these stocks, to supply the demand which they are meeting. This Townships stock which has been offering at the advanced figure was bought by local houses, and put into storage. From this it seems these buyers have faith in a much higher market in the future, to render these transactions profitable. There is, of course, a possibility that the market will not turn out as anticipated, but to many it evidently looks like a fairly good speculation. There are now three ships on their way from Australia, with butter for the London market, and the arrivals from Siberia of late have been exceptionally large, and in the face of this, prices have been well maintained. The Siberian stock was snapped up as quickly as offered, which looks good for Australian and Canadian butter to arrive, as these two countries produce stock of a superior quality. It must be understood that London and Bristol are the points where the greatest activity seems to be present in the English market. Reports from other points state that the butter trade is dull. The London market is active, and has been active owing to the fact that there is an increasing number of tourists arriving there. The old city has had a wonderful year in this respect, owing to the Franco-British Exposition and also the fact that Paris of late has fallen somewhat in disfavor as a Mecca for globe trotters, and to-day everyone seems to be pointing towards London. It is said that it is no unusual thing to have one hundred thousand people arrive from the continent in almost a day. All this is good for the provision trades, and it is this fact that has kept London to the fore amidst English cities in its demands for butter. In this respect Bristol has also shown some preference for the Canadian product. The butter business according to reports arriving from American points, indicates inactivity of the market. The long drought seemed to have exercised a more deteriorating effect on the pastures than here. This, however, according to one authority, is not borne out by the volume of receipts arriving, which have been increasing if anything. This, however, may be due to shipment of stock held by factorymen previous to the dry weather. Highest grade of stock is meeting with fairly good sales, but the lower grades are much neglected. Prices all around are high. Some think that the cooler weather which will call out the storage stocks will give high prices a jolt. Farmers there are complaining that the rains which fell were insufficient to properly restore the pastures. The October make is looked forward to with considerable interest, as it will prove pretty effectually to be the key to the situation. Locally, the demand for butter is very good indeed and finest creamery is quoted at 25½c in round lots and 26c to 26½c in small lots.

Receipts of the season from May 1 up to the present are 351,517 packages, as against 344,899 packages for the corresponding time of last year. Exports for the same period have been this season so far 88,417 packages, against 66,761 packages for the same period of last year.

Cheese has receded somewhat from its lofty position of a few weeks ago. Prices here have followed closely on the heels of the decline in the country. All of this represents the reaction from the speculative condition of the market a few weeks ago. This movement was led by parties in the Old Country, and was assisted by men on this side. Many, however, think that it has struck the bottom, and will strengthen up before long. This opinion, however, is not shared by all, and some are looking for further declines. Stocks are very low all over the country. Many large houses who had from 20,000 to 50,000 boxes in storage last year at this time, have nothing at all this year. It is estimated that there is a shortage of 100,000 boxes at least in Canada at the present moment. This certainly looks like higher prices before long. Receipts of cheese for the season since May 1 are 1,605,407 boxes, against 1,769,729 boxes for the corresponding period of last year. Exports up to date are 1,486,437 boxes, against 1,685,568 boxes for the corresponding period of last year. Westerns are quoted at 12⅛c to 12¼c, and Easterns at 11⅞c to 12c.

THE PROVISION SITUATION

Toronto, October 14, 1908.

"There isn't much new in the situation this week," said a prominent packer in talking over trade conditions. "The English market is again a little lower and with fairly large deliveries here prices have fallen off a notch."

The present is rather an off season with the packers and they do not usually expect much business during the first couple of months of Fall. This year, after the disappointing conditions prevalent for so many weeks during the Summer it was hoped that overseas demand would continue heavy a little longer than usual. The season, however, seems to be following along the usual lines.

The British market is not particularly active at present, anyway. On top of this the Danes are making their usual heavy killings and shipping in large supplies. The Irish packers, though not doing a great deal, are steadily hammering away and are holding their own. Add to this the fact that in the last couple of weeks shipment by United States firms which were for several weeks previous almost completely curtailed and it will be seen that the British market ought to be pretty well loaded with pork product and the demand for the Canadian goods is not very active. The British market, on which a drop was noted last week, went off again during the present week and things over there seem to be feeling a bit easy, and, according to reports received here, are likely to continue so for some time.

Local business, too, is not so good as it has been for several months back. With the arrival of colder weather people seem to be resorting to fresh meat in preference to the more easily prepared product of the packer.

In the face of a fairly heavy run of hogs these conditions could only tend to knock down the price, which has gone another notch below the decline noted last week. The f.o.b. price this week is $6.12½, a York shilling less than a week ago. This brings "fed and watered" prices to $6.45. The quality of offerings is very fair and is improving as the weeks progress.

The experience of the past couple of months when hogs were not forthcoming under top-notch prices and now are arriving freely on a declined price leads one outside to wonder whether the farmers couldn't get their hogs into condition about a month earlier than at the present season, at a time when good values are almost certain to rule.

The United States markets have been rather more active during the week, though conditions have been somewhat unsettled as is evidenced in the following review of the situation from the New York Journal of Commerce:

"There has been more activity in the option market for products the past week, as the result of a very considerable increase in receipts of hogs, while the attitude of packers on the market has been rather uncertain. They have not taken advantage of these big receipts to break the price of hogs, as they might easily have done, and they have prevented any heavy break in future products, which is taken to mean that they are trying to hold up the market to get rid of their stocks on hand, and yet they have been sellers on strong spots and apparently supporting products on the weak ones. The cash situation has been against them, as trade has been falling off, even the jobbing trade, that had been better the previous two or three weeks, and prices of spot stuff have been weaker than futures, indicating that packers have been trying to get out of their cash stuff before receipts of hogs get heavier. Yet the condition of hogs is poor, indicating grass fed still and selling by farmers to save their corn. How long this is to continue is a question which depends much upon the course of the corn market, which is expected, however, to decline materially after the movement has become heavy enough to supply the nearby wants of the trade and leave a surplus to come on the market. Whether the situation suits the packers or they are loaded down with more old product than they can work off before the new packing season begins is a question. At any rate, they are talking bullish and acting bearish, while the future supply of hogs is problematical, although the number in the country is liberal and there has been little cholera among them this season."

PROVISION MARKETS

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS—There is a good trade passing in the provision market, especially for the various lines in lard. Compound remains the same as at last quotations, but pure has gone forward in all lines from an ⅛c to a cent. Pork is also stronger in all lines, having advanced two dollars in some cases.

BUTTER—There has been a falling off in supplies arriving, which has resulted in the development of a strong tone to the market. The local demand is very good, and this also has contributed to the increasing strength of the market. Fresh creamery solids are now quoted from 25c to 26½c per pound, and prints from 26c to 27c.

CHEESE—Owing to a weaker condition of the market in the country the local market is less firm. Conditions in the country have recovered from the recent drought more quickly than it was thought it would be able to do. If the weather continues favorable receipts will be heavier.

HONEY—Supplies arriving are large, and business in these lines is active. The white clover variety seems to be predominating the market, both in quality and quantity. Trade is good. Prices rule the same as at last quotations.

PROVISIONS—Business is fully as good as at any time during the past three months. Demand is good and supplies are nearly up to normal. In about three weeks' time supplies are expected to be quite free again. Prices are firm, though it is believed the high point has been reached, and when hogs are more plentiful quotations will be somewhat lower on almost every line. Already there is an easier feeling in lard prices. Large hams have temporarily advanced one cent, following the lead of light and mediums a week ago; and barrel pork, which is hard to get, is up another 50 cents.

BUTTER—This line is advancing, and nearly every grade has gone up one or two cents during the week. Demand is good and supplies—that is country supplies—are fairly free. The keeping qualities of the butter are good now that the cooler weather is with us.

EGGS—All but one house quotes 23 cents as the selling price of eggs this week; and one of the big commission firms which has been rather lower than the others during the Summer is asking 23½. The lowest quotation on the market is 21c, though the same seller is asking 22c for a good line. Considering that farmers are asking 20c in the country, and that freight and risks have to be taken by the dealer in the city, 22c is a pretty low price.

CHEESE—This line is off again. During the past month trading has been spasmodic. Prices are unchanged. Only one concern in Toronto is handling old

DO FOODS DETERIORATE IN COLD STORAGE?

Interesting Findings of a United States Government Chemist.

The year book of the United States Department of Agriculture, just issued, contains a chapter on "Cold Storage Foods and Their Relation to Public Health," which will prove interesting to all who deal in cold storage foods. We reproduce part of this herewith:

It is stated by the writer, the bacterial chemist of the Bureau of Chemistry, that "it is estimated that approximately from 75 to 90 per cent. of all the poultry produced in the United States is, for a longer or shorter period, preserved in cold storage. While the number of ducks, turkeys and geese is by no means small, chickens, of course, are greatly in the majority, and from the appearance of the cold-storage warehouses in our large cities it would seem to be almost a matter of routine that every chicken intended for market should sojourn there for a certain, or rather an uncertain, time." The vital question for the consumer of poultry is whether cold storage poultry is wholesome or not, it being an unquestionable fact that nearly all the poultry sold is, for a longer or shorter time, in cold storage before being offered for sale. The testimony of those engaged in the business of refrigeration is, of course, uniformly to the effect that keeping poultry in this way does not impair its quality at all. An officer of a refrigerating company in New York City is quoted as saying: "In our experience we have carried frozen undrawn poultry for four years and found it as to appearance at the end of that time in a wholesome condition, and the same was eaten with no injurious effects. Poultry kept in a freezer and kept at the right temperature will keep for an indefinite length of time in a healthful condition."

The investigation of this subject made by the Bureau of Chemistry does not support this favorable view of refrigeration. Serious deterioration was found in chickens kept in cold storage for long periods. While actual putrefaction was not indicated by the odor, the keeping quality "was practically nil, and in a short time the foulness of its odor was distinctly noticeable." The conclusions formed by this government investigator are worth quoting:

The changes in the chickens which have been described are not the most pronounced of their kind, other specimens exhibiting more marked degenerations and some showing better conditions. There were, rather, alterations representing as nearly as possible the mean.

Such being the case, the dictum of the warehouse men that there is no change in cold-storage poultry and that it may be kept for an indefinite period can not be accepted in its entirety. Both microscopic study and the taste of the cooked fowl confirm the fact that microscopically visible degeneration does take place.

Considering the enormous growth and the wide extent of the refrigeration of foodstuffs, as well as the absolute lack of authoritative supervision of such frozen products before they are offered for sale, it seems most desirable that a careful study should be made to determine whether such alterations as have been noted affect the appearance and histological integrity of the flesh only, or whether, as has been asserted by some, the consumption of poultry after long periods of cold storage is not responsible for some of the obscure intestinal disorders and the imperfect metabolism from which modern humanity, especially the dwellers in large cities, are so apt to suffer.

If it is true that from 75 to 90 per cent. of the poultry offered for sale has been in cold storage there is not much chance for all of us to have poultry that is absolutely fresh. The best that the buyer can do is to get that which shows the least signs of antiquity, unless he is so situated that he can buy of some honest poultry raiser who has no cold storage plant. At any rate it seems clear that too much care cannot be taken, merely from the health point of view, in regard to the eating of poultry whose history is a sealed book.—Modern Grocer.

WHAT SAUSAGE IS.

For a long time the United States commissioners and sausage manufacturers have been at loggerheads over the question of "What is Sausage?" Some said a sausage was one thing and others declared it was something else. The committee on standards of the Pure Food Department of the Department of Agriculture has now come to the rescue with a sausage description. Incidentally, it tells what other meats are. Its findings, which have now been formally adopted, are as follows:

Sausage, sausage meat is a comminuted meat from neat cattle or swine or a mixture of such meats, either fresh, salted, pickled or smoked, with added salt and spices and with or without the addition of edible animal fats, blood and sugar, or subsequent smoking. It contains no larger amount of water than the meats from which it is prepared and if it bears a name descriptive of kind, composition or origin, it corresponds to such descriptive name. All animal tissues used as containers, such as casings, stomachs, etc., are clean and sound and impart to the contents no other substance than salt.

Blood sausage is sausage to which has been added clean, fresh blood from neat cattle or swine in good health at the time of slaughter.

Canned meat is the cooked, fresh meat of fowl, neat cattle or swine, preserved in hermetically sealed packages.

Corned or cured meat is meat, cured or pickled with dry salt or in brine, with or without the addition of sugar or syrup and (pending further inquiry) saltpeter.

Potted meat is comminuted and cooked meat from those parts of the animal ordinarily used for food in the fresh state, with or without salt and spices and inclosed in suitable containers hermetically sealed.

Meat loaf is a mixture of comminuted cooked meat, with or without spices, cereals, milk and eggs, and pressed into a loaf. If it bears a descriptive name, it corresponds thereto.

Mincemeat is a mixture of not less than ten (10) per cent. of cooked, comminuted meat, and chopped suet, apple and other fruit, with salt, spices and sugar, syrup or molasses, and vinegar, fresh, concentrated or fermented fruit juices and spirituous liquors.—Modern Grocer.

An Opportunity for Grocers

CHILDREN'S CANDY TRADE A PROFITABLE SOURCE OF INCOME.

This is an opportunity that exists in every town. It has been awaiting discovery for years. And it wants to be discovered. It passes the general stores these September days, in groups of threes, of fives, of sevens; morning, noon and night.

The great army of school children, hundreds strong, and in many towns thousands strong, is the golden opportunity to which the general merchants are blind. They see the children, but they do not realize the opportunity they present for increasing the trade of the store. Yet these children are about the biggest and best paying advertisements that general merchants can employ.

Children's trade is a possible source of income that few general merchants get any benefit or revenue from. It is a fertile field, whose surface, as yet, has only been scratched. With the right methods of cultivation it will give enormous yields. Children's trade is an advertising opportunity too good, too big, too lasting, to be neglected. It should be taken at its real worth and valued accordingly.

Some Are Waking Up.

Far-sighted business men are already awake to the immense trade there is in supplying children's needs, and stores that make an exclusive specialty of children's goods are now established in many of the larger cities. Small stores in Greater New York, located near a public school, rent at a premium because of the large and profitable trade in children's school supplies, toys and candy. And these stores are eagerly taken by merchants who ten years ago would have laughed at the idea of supporting a family on the proceeds of children's spending money.

Children's trade is not a matter of small moment; it is an important item in the building of a retail business. The general merchant who neglects it is overlooking his golden opportunity. There is good profit in children's trade and the merchant who secures it will have the largest general trade in the town.

Winning Children's Trade.

Children are won quicker by "goodies" than by anything else. When the writer wore knee pants, there was a keen rivalry between the three bakers in the neighborhood of his home. Two of them began to cut prices. The third one was wiser. He said nothing, but began to saw wood. One morning when the writer was sent out for the household bread, he entered the store of this particular baker because it happened to be the nearest. He made his usual purchase, and with it the baker handed him a tart, such as all small boys love, and said: "There, my little man, that's for buying your bread from me." 'Nuf said. The news was too good to keep, and on the way home, the other boys, bound on similar errands, were shown the tart and told where one was to be had for nothing. The news spread without any advertising on the baker's part, and he had won the fight before the others were aware of what he was doing.

Children are won through kindness and parents favor the store where the children are made welcome. All general merchants can not make or sell tarts, but they can sell something sweeter, better liked, easier to get and easier to handle. They can win the trade of children with high quality, low priced candies.

Candy is the open Sesame to a child's heart. The promise of candy dries the tears on wet cheeks; it bribes the mischevious boy to be good; it is an effective reward for getting lessons. It gives the big sister who is being courted, freedom from the pranks of a small brother. Candy makes peace where threats fail. Candy brings contentment to a child when toys and games lose their power to amuse. A sale of candies at popular prices will bring more children into a store than any other offering, for children love candy.

Special Sales Do the Work.

Special candy sales for children will quickly turn a golden stream of trade into a general store. These sales should be planned to interest children and care taken to have them simple and easy for young minds to understand. The important point in all these special sales is to see that the children always have some little thing to do, before they can get the candies.

A "Time of Day Sale" is a good one to start out with. Have this sale exclusively for children. Offer candies at special prices to every child under ten years of age who can tell the "time of day" by the big store clock hung back of the candy counter. "Every child should know how to tell the time" you may advertise, "and every child should know how good our candies are." "Tell the time and get twenty cents' worth for a dime." Make the rules of the sale simple and plain and do not show any favoritism. Saturday, of course, is the best day for a sale of this kind.

Birthday sales are always popular with children and one may be held each month. Begin this month by advertising that every child born in October will receive a present of candy on the last day of the month, equal to five per cent. of the amount of goods purchased during the month by members of the family. This plan keeps up interest in the Birthday Sale all through the month and has the advantage of helping the sales of other goods.—The Southern Merchant.

THE FIRST CANDY.

The most ancient kind of candy is the sugar plum. It was the invention of Julius Dragatus, a noted Roman baker and confectioner, who belonged to the family of Fabius. It was in 177 B.C., that he made the great discovery which for twenty centuries has grown constantly in favor.

These bonbons, called "dragati," after their inventor (dragees in French), remained the exclusive privilege of the family of Fabius. But at the birth or marriage of one of that family a great distribution of "dragati" took place, as a sign of rejoicing. The custom is still observed by many of the nobility of Europe.

The pastille is of far later origin, having been invented and introduced into France by an Italian confectioner, the Florentine, John Pastilla, a protege of the Medicis. When Marie de Medici married Henry IV. of France, Pastilla accompanied his sovereign to the French court, where his bonbons had a tremendous vogue. Everybody wanted the Florentine's pastilles, which were excellent. He made them with all kinds of flavors —chocolate, coffee, rose, violet, mint, wine, strawberry, raspberry, vanilla, heliotrope and carnation.

Burned almonds are purely of French origin, owing their inception to the gluttony of a certain French merchant. One day Marshal Duplessis-Pralin, an old gourmet, sent for Lassagne, who had already invented many a toothsome dainty, to concoct a new bonbon for him. Lassagne searched, reflected, combined, until finally he conceived a delicious bonbon, which he baptized gloriously with the name of his master, Pralina, the French for burned almonds.—Confectioners' Gazette.

Chas. Snow, confectioner, 892 College Street, Toronto, has sold his branch store at 1176 Queen Street, west, to John Hunter.

MARKETS STRONG AND UNCHANGED—AN OPPORTUNITY FOR RETAILERS IN CANDY BUSINESS.

Business continues excellent in all lines of flour and cereals, according to reports made last week. Millers particularly speak of excellent business being done and of the outlook for a continuance of this.

The markets are pretty generally steady and no changes are reported except in feed, which is a little easier in Quebec markets. The excellent demand from local merchants and the continued brisk export demand is keeping all lines firm.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR—Trade is reported as very brisk, having brightened up wonderfully during the last few days. People seem to have now arrived at the conclusion that prices will not ease off any owing to the movement of the new crop. If the production of other countries besides Canada, which contribute largely to the world's wheat supply had been up to normal the probability is that prices would have been easier, but as it is it now seems that any surplus which Canada has will bring good prices elsewhere.

IMPORTED LINES OUSTING LOCAL FRUITS—WINTER LINES OF FISH ARRIVING.

The Winter aspect is gradually closing on the Canadian fruit markets. All native lines are drawing to a close, and imported lines of new late fruit are beginning to make their appearance. Toronto reports the first arrival of Florida fruit—oranges and pineapples. The former are said to be too green for ready sale, and evidently were plucked too early for the market. The high price, however, which the early samples brought in New York no doubt had much to do with the growers and packers trying to rush the season. The pineapples are excellent stock and the grapefruit fair.

Lemons are getting scarce, but all Canadian markets note a decline in price. New York is holding to a strong price, however, but outsiders will hardly buy more than supplies for immediate needs, as the new stock will arrive early in November. California peaches and plums are holding their own, and some blue varieties of California grapes are seen. Malaga grapes appear to be good quality.

New Brunswick potatoes are in the maelstrom among vegetables. The partial failure of potatoes in the New England States has sent a great many buyers into the Maritime Provinces. Onions, too, are a feature, the natives trying to oust the Spanish variety now arriving rather freely.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS—The demand during the week has not been beyond fair. Jamaica oranges are offering this week at a lower figure. California are a little stronger, now being quoted at from $4.50 to $5.25. Verdelli lemons are also slightly lower, being quoted as low as $2.65. Bananas are also somewhat stronger. Other lines remain the same as at last quotation.

Yellow preserving tomatoes are being sold at 50c per gin box. Turnips are lower, now ruling at 75c per bag, and squash are selling at $1 per doz. Other lines remain the same as at last quotation. FISH—All kinds of fresh and frozen fish are in good supply and prices are low. Fresh salmon are finished. Lake trout and whitefish will soon be finished. In smoked lines, haddies and kippers are now arriving freely and demand is better, owing to cooler weather. New smoked herring are also in the market. In prepared lines the demand is good for all lines. Green cod is lower in price, owing to larger quantities arriving. Locally trade is good.

TORONTO.

GREEN FRUITS—Judging by the discussions going on around the market, the principal line this week is elections. Seriously, however, while trading is not at all on the dull side, there is not the business being done now that there was say two or three weeks ago. Canadian lines are going off and the new crop of imported fruits is coming to the front. This week there are Florida oranges and Florida pineapples being offered. The former are very green and like those offered in New York were picked too early. The first car of Florida fruit arrived in Toronto last Saturday and the oranges were immediately put in the ripening rooms.

Nova Scotia cranberries are being offered. They are a pinky colon, but look good sound stock and at the low price asked in comparison with Cape Cods should stimulate some business. Lemons are getting very scarce but prices have not advanced as they are advancing in New York. Spanish and California grapes of several varieties are offering, and Canadian grapes are free enough in supply, though not in the abundance anticipated earlier in the season. Some splendid late Niagara peaches are being shown. Apples are firming up in price and choice varieties range from $2 to $3 a barrel. A barrel of Kings that had been on exhibition at the Scarboro Fair went at $6.

VEGETABLES—New Brunswick potatoes have again gone up and Ontarios are coming in freely. New England reports a semi-failure of spuds and many Yankee buyers are in the Maritime Provinces buying the best of the potatoes offering. Onions are very plentiful—that is all varieties except fancies. Ontario Danvers are very free in supply and are competing strenuously with Spanish onions. Tomatoes are firm and the quality is first class. They have had a long season and have stood up well. Pumpkins are cheap and may be had almost for the asking. Some fair baskets of mixed green and red peppers look good, and celery is being offered in fair quantities. Cauliflower, too, is plentiful in supply.

FISH—The first car of frozen halibut and salmon from British Columbia arrived on the Toronto market this week. The season for fresh halibut and salmon is over. Some few price changes are noted, but on the whole quotations are much the same as last week. NOTES OF THE FRUIT MARKETS.

Peter Massey, fruiter, 464 Queen St. west, Toronto, has sold his business to F. E. Vanderwater.

British Columbia is this week sending some samples of fruit for exhibition purposes to the Old Country from the Victoria district. The exhibit consists of apples and pears. The varieties of apples sent include Cox's Orange Pippin, Ribstone Pippin, Blenheim Orange Pippin, King of Tomkins and Belle de Boskoop. The pears will be of the Deyen de Comise variety. All of these species are highly prized in England, so that good specimens of these varieties will do more good than equally good specimens of kinds of fruit with which the public in England is less familiar.

The Florida orange crop this year is estimated at 4,000,000 boxes of unusually good fruit.

Porto Rico's grapefruit crop this year will be only about 60 per cent. of last year, on account of lack of rain during bloom. The pineapple crop, however, will be double that of last year, and will begin to move freely next week.

Although the New England cranberry crop is considered but little better than half of last year's, there is not expected to be any shortage.

While supplies of Almeria grapes reaching America may not be so great as last year, high prices are not looked for. The fruit is of better quality. Quite a lot of Almerias sold on the Canadian and United States markets last year were poor stock. Some of the smaller Ontario centres will experiment with small direct consignments this Fall.

In the course of a discussion at the quarterly meeting of the B.C. Fruit Growers' Association it was charged that Americans were obtaining a hold on the Northwest market and shipping in unmarked fruit by way of Lethbridge, contrary to the Fruit Marks' Act of the Dominion. Deputy Minister of Agriculture R. M. Palmer, who was present, urged that data should be obtained in proof of this assertion, when the Government would be forced to act. The secretary was appointed to do this.

Apple shipments from Halifax are an important item. So far this season 101,000 barrels have been loaded at that port for the European markets and it is expected that before the season is over from 600,000 to 650,000 barrels will be shipped.

The Department of Agriculture is issuing a warning to apple shippers that pink rot appears to be very prevalent this year, and hence the shipping of apples not perfectly free from scab, and showing any signs of pink rot, is particularly hazardous. Many carloads of fruit were examined at the dock in Montreal by the Dominion fruit inspectors and were found practically worthless as a result of this pest.

The British and Continental markets are said to be overloaded with apples, and Nova Scotia growers, who have been heavy shippers of late, are asked to hold back Winter fruit in the hope of realizing better prices later on. A Liverpool cable of last Saturday reads:—"Market completely overdone with large arrivals, mostly in very poor condition. 20,000 bbls. selling, mostly Canadian." A later cable from a prominent Liverpool firm says:—"No New England fruit here to-day. New York State's, 9s. 6d. to 15s.; Nova Scotian Gravensteins, 9s. 6d. to 13s. Only the choicest fruit brought the highest quotations. Sound parcels meet with a strong demand at top figures, but averages are pulled down by fruit landing in bad order. Shipments as a rule are landing in bad order."

APPOINTED TORONTO AGENTS.

J. C. Chase, of Chase & Co., Jacksonville, Fla., one of the largest firms packing Florida oranges, grape fruit, celery, tomatoes, pineapples, etc., in the United States, was in Toronto last week looking over the local market. As a result of his visit, J. J. McCabe was appointed Chase & Co.'s agent in Toronto, and will look after the firm's interests in that city.

BRUSH FACTORY SOLD.

The Stevens-Hepner Company, brush and broom manufacturers, Port Elgin, Ont., have bought the plant, patents and goodwill of the Dominion Brush & Mirror Co., of West Toronto, and will move the plant to Port Elgin about October 15. This is understood to be the only plant in Canada for the manufacture of fine hair and clothes brushes, and the machinery and process of manufacture are covered by valuable patents. The Dominion Brush & Mirror Co. have been employing about 20 men, and most of this staff will be taken to Port Elgin.

Cash or Credit Business

A PRACTICAL DISCUSSION ON THE WORKING OUT OF THE TWO SYSTEMS.

There is a general concensus of opinion that a cash business is the better one among retailers. This is in the large majority of cases true, but there are certain circumstances which render a cash trade impossible if the largest profitable business is to be done.

In communities where customers are workers in factories and other industrial institutions where they receive their pay only once a week, or every two weeks, a rigid cash business is the only safe one. After becoming thoroughly familiar with the people in the community, credit can be extended during the time which intervenes between pay days, but if the grocer once allows them to go over it is sure to sow the seeds of a habit which will result in loss of self-respect to the customer, and financial disaster to the grocer.

Promptness in Collections.

It behooves the grocer to be prompt with his bills every week, and to insist upon their payment before further credit is extended.

It requires many years for some grocers to learn the truth of the fact that it is better to have the goods on the shelves than to have them on the books, and the hope of some day getting the pay for them which in a large majority of cases ends in hope, and nothing more tangible. Take, for instance, a man with a family of two, three or four children, and oftentimes more, receiving a salary of ten to twelve dollars a week. If this man becomes involved with you to any extent, the hope of getting it is extremely vague. That man may be passably honest to start with, and may put forth an effort to pay, but this extra burden becomes too heavy and he transfers his trade to another store where he pays cash. As time proceeds his efforts to pay you vanish, and he comes to regard you as an enemy rather than a benefactor, and if he sees you coming up the street he slips around the corner to avoid you, and you are deprived of a hearty "good morning," his goodwill, his cash, and his influence among his neighbors. He loses your consideration, respect and friendship, to say nothing of his own self-respect.

The Grocer a Benefactor.

Sometimes, however, an honest man who has paid you hundreds of dollars in trade falls ill or is temporarily incapacitated, and in such cases it is difficult to refuse credit, but the grocer can temper the volume of his trade, and for the peace of his mind it is well to look upon such contingencies as charities rather than business transactions. Let it be said to their credit, however, that most men of this character ultimately pay their debts.

The Dead Beat.

This brings us to a discussion of another genus known to the trade as the "dead beat." His life is spent in parasitic pursuits, and his creed is never to pay for anything which he can obtain by any other means which will not rob him of his liberty. All grocers know him as he regards them as his natural prey. He runs up a bill here, and as quick as a demand is made upon him for money, immediately goes to another grocer and does precisely the same thing, until he has paid his respects to all members of the trade. After this, being of a nomadic nature, he flies to fields anew to practice his nefarious operations.

As a rule, this variety of a man has nothing which can be taken for debt, therefore he remains immune from all attempts to wrest any compensation from him. Their methods are variegated. For instance, when one of them thinks he has gotten all he can from you he will come around with some complaint which is always unreasonable, and does not admit of settlement or else he disputes at least a half of the account.

An Arrangement for Mutual Protection.

In this connection a very effectual organization may be mentioned which led to the extermination of dead beats in a small village with three stores. The proprietors came to the conclusion that they could make more money if they established a closer community of interests. Prices, hours of closing and various other matters were discussed at this conference of the three grocers, and, among others, a method of dealing with "dead beats." They established a means of communication, so that these characters were under strict surveillance, and when one grocer was beaten by one of them he communicated the knowledge immediately to the others. In this way their operations were confined to about one week's duration and then they were obliged to pay cash at the other stores or go without.

The result was that they generally made up their minds that other quarters were more congenial to their operations Thus it will be seen not only were the grocers doing themselves a benefit, but were also eliminating from the village many undesirables.

Credit Hard on the Small Capital.

Credit giving is especially disastrous to the man starting business with a small capital, because soon he will find himself with empty shelves, and a book full of credits which are not worth five cents on the dollar. Another danger lies in the fact that he is obliged to ask for long credits from his wholesale house, and in this way he becomes their chained and shackled slave, and they can squeeze out his life blood if they are so disposed.

These are some of the disadvantages of a credit business, but there is another side of the question which presents a different aspect. The discussion so far has been based on the assumption that the grocer has located his business in the factory end of the town. The same principles with regard to giving credit do not apply to those situated in the better residential quarters. Here if a man is going to do the greatest volume of profitable trade, it seems almost necessary that a certain amount of credit should be extended to customers. Many people who keep servants leave the ordering of groceries entirely to them, and pay the bills promptly as soon as the account is rendered. It must not be assumed from this that there are no "dead beats" among this class, because there are, but the limitations of their operations is more definitely drawn and then there is always the fear of social ostracism staring them in the face if they do not conduct themselves in a manner becoming their station in life and in society. This fact gives ample scope to the grocer to exercise his judgment, and weed out those given to such practices. This sort of business is the most profitable if the grocer has sufficient capital to render him independent of the necessity for immediate collections. When people run an account at a certain store they are sure to buy more than they would if they paid cash for everything which they bought. Then again those who pay cash generally want all the discounts and rock-bottom prices. Thus it will be observed that a grocer must govern himself according to the community in which he resides, and if he extends credit do so with the greatest caution, or, in other words, when in doubt, don't do it, as it is better to have the goods on the shelves than to have them in the hands of irresponsible people.

Such has been the experience of the oldest men in the business, and if the one embarking upon the somewhat perilous sea of the retail grocery business wishes to steer his craft safely he must observe the few essential fundamental principles.

TO GET AND HOLD TRADE

Sell your customers absolutely reliable goods. Don't run the risk of losing their good will by offering an article of doubtful quality, or one which may injure health.

When you sell Royal Baking Powder, you are sure of always pleasing your customers. Every housewife knows that Royal is absolutely pure and dependable. It is the only baking powder made from Royal Grape cream of tartar. You are warranted in guaranteeing it in every respect, the most reliable, effective and wholesome of all the baking powders. On the other hand you take chances when you sell cheap baking powders made from alum or phosphate of lime. They are unhealthful and fail to give satisfaction.

Royal never fails to give satisfaction and pays the grocer a greater profit, pound for pound, than any other baking powder he sells.

To insure a steady sale and a satisfied trade be sure to carry a full stock of Royal Baking Powder.

The Canadian Tobacco Industry

THE WORKING OUT OF THE RECENT TARIFF CHANGES—OPPORTUNITIES WITH IMPROVED QUALITY.

Canada has for many years been experimenting with the cultivation of tobacco, and so far the results have been highly satisfactory, to such an extent, indeed, that this industry is now regarded as one of Canada's prominent assets. The Department of Agriculture has done its duty in lending a helping hand, and have spread literature bearing on the subject all over the country, especially among the farmers, and have employed experts from tobacco growing countries to give the growers the advantage of their experience. All of this has resulted, not only in a marvelous increase in the amount of native grown tobacco, but has also increased its value by improving it. More scientific methods are now employed to cure the tobacco, and knowledge in this direction is now much more widely spread.

Canadian Article Improving.

There was a time when the use of Canadian grown tobacco was confined almost exclusively to some of the farmers of the Province of Quebec, who are the real pioneers in this business. The use of French tobacco was at one time looked upon as a joke, but this has since changed, and now many who formerly looked down upon it are using it. It has been found to blend with imported tobaccos, and in this way much of it is disposed of in Canada.

At the present time the production of tobacco is ample to supply the home requirements, so if this industry is going to increase in volume to a greater extent, foreign markets will have to be cultivated. This does not necessarily mean that the efforts which are being devoted to it should be discontinued, but rather that they should be turned in the direction of improvement in quality rather than quantity, as there is plenty of room yet for this.

A Profitable Industry.

It has been shown that tobacco raising is a profitable employment for farmers, and a crop is more remunerative to them than many other products.

Some new tariff regulations have gone into operation recently concerning the importation of Virginia tobacco, which will prove a detriment to many manufacturers using Virginia leaf. Tariff tinkering is always a dangerous occupation, and no sooner are changes made in it than objections are raised on this or that quarter. To say the least, it is an extremely delicate matter to deal with. It is patent to all that the development of a country absolutely demands on periodic readjustment of the tariff, and the ideal consummation should result in the greatest good to the greatest number.

Effects of New Tariff.

After investigating the effect the new regulations will have on the trade, the following facts were discovered. One large firm maintained that it would result in sending them to the United States as now it was very much to their disadvantage to remain in Canada. It was pointed out that their products went to England, the United States, Australia, China and South Africa. They employ Canadian help, use Canadian cans, packages and labels, and the goods are packed in Canadian boxes. This gives employment indirectly to many not employed by them, and is a benefit to Canada. Up to the present they have used Virginia and Turkish tobaccos, because the class of trade which they sold to would not take Canadian tobacco, but instead required either the Virginia or Turkish leaf.

As was explained, it was not disloyalty to their country that made them use foreign grown tobacco, but rather the class of trade which they were obliged to satisfy, if they wished to remain in business. They maintained they were as much Canadian as they could possibly be, as has been shown previously. Thus it will be seen the imposition of the new tariff threatens to make their business unprofitable to them, if they remain in Canada. Those who are responsible for the measure undoubtedly acted in good faith, assuming that such a regulation would increase the consumption of the home-grown product, but this seems improbable, as consumers are rather particular about their tobacco, and if a man who has been accustomed to smoke Virginia tobacco all his life is obliged to pay a little more for it, he will do so rather than smoke Canadian-grown tobacco.

The whole thing now seems to resolve itself into the question, whether it will benefit the tobacco-growing industry sufficiently to compensate for the loss to the country of the factories which use the Virginia product in the manufacture of their goods? It is acknowledged that the manufacturers are anxiously awaiting the time when the home-grown product will be quite the equal of that which comes from abroad. They maintain that as soon as its quality is so improved, as to place it in the same class, they will be only to happy to use it, but at the present time such a course is rendered impossible by the demands of their trade.

Larger Field for Canadian Article.

Undoubtedly there is a much larger field for Canadian-grown tobacco than is now occupied. An authority, speaking of the prospects, said there was much room for expansion, but he thought it would be a difficult up-hill fight to capture much foreign trade with the native product as other countries were so well established and had the advantage of years of experience, and an established trade. In his opinion, there are some varieties of tobacco grown in different parts of the world for which those countries are justly celebrated, and no other country could hope to produce an article with exactly the same qualities. For instance, there are certain parts of Virginia which produce a leaf that cannot be grown elsewhere, not even in the neighboring States. Parts of Cuba produce a tobacco used in the manufacture of cigars, which cannot be equalled in the world for special requirements. So localized is the growth sometimes that one valley alone will grow a variety that perhaps the valley next to it cannot produce at all. Continuing, he said: "Who knows but what Canada will yet produce some variety of tobacco which will reach its greatest perfection here. No country can expect to excel in every branch of such a business, and especially the tobacco industry. There is no reason, though, why, with persistent effort Canada cannot sometime capture a portion of the foreign trade and thus add another accomplishment to the list of her economic triumphs."

"BALMORAL" IN DEMAND.

Illustrating the fact that Canadians appreciate pure marmalades, jams and preserves, is the announcement just made by J. W. Windsor, that sales of Balmoral pure marmalade for the year just finishing are over double what they were the previous year. Balmoral pure jams and marmalades have won a reputation for purity and excellence and the extraordinary demand there has been for the brand is the best criterion by which to judge the quality of the lines. During the fruit season the factory, under the personal supervision of Alex Stewart, was running day and night, putting up Balmoral pure strawberry, raspberry and other varieties jam. Balmoral goods are sold in every part of the country and are very popular with trade and consumer alike. Attractively labelled, they sell very quickly once they are stocked, while second sales are promoted by the quality of the goods.

Mr. Stewart, J. W. Windsor's superintendent, has had a long connection with English and American factories, and has brought to bear in the turning out of Balmoral goods all the knowledge he gained in this experience. Mr. Stewart leaves for England on a business and pleasure trip shortly.

AN OLD AND ENERGETIC TEA HOUSE.

Cooper, Cooper & Co., whose representative is now in Canada, lay claim to the honors of age, having been in the tea business for over fifty years. They pride themselves upon being an old-fashioned house, dealing in old-fashioned teas. But in this case, the combination of age and old fashion has not become an impediment to advancement. Cooper, Cooper & Co. are so well equipped with buying and selling systems, storage and blending facilities, and a staff of tea experts that they occupy a position that might be envied by some of their contemporaries. In a little tea booklet they are now distributing, their principal blends are described for the benefit of the retail purchaser, and hints on tea-making are given which should lead the customer to take a greater interest in tea as a beverage and in the preparation of it. A special feature of the pamphlet is the department in which are listed and described the "China Teas of Long Ago." Cooper, Cooper & Co. claim to sell more China tea than any other firm in the United Kingdom.

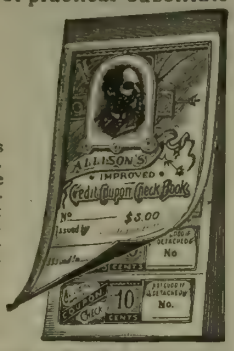
It Takes a Lot of Time to Keep Books

and when the entries are made up of many small items the expense is away out of proportion to the amount involved. Many attempts have been made to devise some safe and economical way to avoid this burdensome labor. The most practical substitute is the



Allison Coupon System

It is safe. Keeps a perfect record. Leaves no loophole for complaints. Eliminates 95 per cent of the labor. Requires the investment of but a trifling sum. Does not necessitate the employment of skilled clerks. Here is the plan:

If a man wants credit for $10.00 and you think he is good for it, give him a $10.00 Allison Coupon Book, and have him sign the receipt or note form in front of book, which you tear out and keep. Charge him with $10.00—no trouble. When he buys a dime's worth, tear off a ten-cent coupon, and so on until the book is used up. Then he pays the $10.00 and gets another book. No pass-books, no charging, no lost time, no errors, no disputes. Allison Coupon Books are recognized everywhere as the best. For sale by the jobbing trade everywhere.

A SPLENDID GERMAN TRADE PAPER.

A few days ago there came to us from Berlin, Germany, a very interesting issue of "Die Kolonialwaren-Woche," the representative grocery journal of the German Empire. This issue was the "Festnummer," or special issue, and reflects a great deal of credit on the publishers. From the standpoint of typography the issue will rank with any trade publication issued. It is printed on heavy calendared paper, is tastefully illustrated, and is bound in a heavy lithographed cover, embossed in gold. The advertising of the paper is comprehensive and exceedingly well arranged, and this department shows a good deal of improvement, from the Canadian standpoint, at least, by reason of the fact that the advertisers seem to be getting away from the conservative and heavy German and English style and are getting to use American methods of display and illustration. As a result the paper is a good deal brighter in appearance. The special articles include illustrated descriptions of industries in which the trade is interested, and shows several store and factory interiors in an interesting way.

SUN PASTE STOVE POLISH IN TINS

Chicago may follow example set in New York where manufacture and sale of inflammable and explosive liquid stove polishes is forbidden on account of the dangerous nature of this material when used by housekeepers.

A recommendation has been introduced into Chicago City Council calling attention to repeated accidents and a recent horrible death in Chicago from this cause and calling attention also to protection from like accidents, secured by ordinance in New York City.

Push RISING SUN Stove Polish and SUN PASTE Stove Polish which are always safe in the hands of the user. They please the housekeeper too. Good profit in them besides and when the entries are made up of many small items the expense is away out of proportion to the amount involved. Many attempts have been made to devise some safe and economical way to avoid this burdensome labor. The most practical substitute is the

It Takes a Lot of Time to Keep Books

Allison Coupon System

It is safe. Keeps a perfect record. Leaves no loophole for complaints. Eliminates 95 per cent of the labor. Requires the investment of but a trifling sum. Does not necessitate the employment of skilled clerks. Here is the plan:

If a man wants credit for $10.00 and you think he is good for it, give him a $10.00 Allison Coupon Book, and have him sign the receipt or note form in front of book, which you tear out and keep. Charge him with $10.00—no trouble. When he buys a dime's worth, tear off a ten-cent coupon, and so on until the book is used up. Then he pays the $10.00 and gets another book. No pass-books, no charging, no lost time, no errors, no disputes. Allison Coupon Books are recognized everywhere as the best. For sale by the jobbing trade everywhere.

OLD-FASHIONED HONESTY

Yes, we particularly specify old-fashioned honesty because nowadays honesty seems to lose caste when applied to much of the prepared eatables now on the market. Adulteration seems to have taken the place of old-fashioned honesty. But it is not so with

OLD HOMESTEAD BRAND

CANNED FRUITS AND VEGETABLES

Everything about a can of Old Homestead brand is up-to date except its purity, and that is old-fashioned. Old Homestead Brand of Canned Goods are as pure as the air from the balsam covered hills of Muskoka. Made from ripe, sound fruits and vegetables from the rich, fertile garden soil of Canada and prepared so that all their nutritious qualities are retained, they cannot help but be good. Try a sample case from your jobber. Your customers' verdict will cause you to "repeat" and that's the kind of business Old Homestead Brand is qualified for.

The Old Homestead Canning Co.,
Picton, Ontario

Quality and Value Always Win

The quality in a tea that tends to produce a steady, healthy growth in sales is what should appeal directly to every grocer.

"SALADA"

has enjoyed the same normal, healthy increase in sales—every year—for seventeen years. It's a "result-getter." Every grocer selling it knows this. We ask you to try it.

The Salada Tea Co. : : Toronto or Montreal

Wagstaffe's Pure Jams

We are packing as fine goods as firms of international reputation, and at a price that will appeal to the pocket of your customer in every walk of life. THE IDEAL DUSTER

Solid Chunks of Comfort result from the use of the Ideal. No minor domestic problem agitates the housewife more than Dust, it is like dish-washing, constant—in season, out of season—in fact, it has no seasons. The public's necessity our opportunity to supply the Ideal—unique in construction—following the lines of a natural hand, giving 11 square inches of wiping surface on top of the cloth. The arm and wrist action permits the user, without climbing or stooping, to reach the hidden dust—on tops of doors, lintels, etc., and on polished floors—giving the hand-wiping results with none of the drudgery. The handle is in two 5-ft. sections, to retail: First section, with head, 35c.; Second extension handle, 15c.; Complete, 50c. Without being presumptuous may we not ask, are not the grocer's per cent. profits largely increased by the lines—to him specialties—sold? Up-to-date specialties are good bait for new customers. The Woodenware and Sundries Jobbers stock our lines—there is 50% to the retailer in the Ideal—make a note of it on your "wants slip."

Will Fight Guild Case to the End

Long-Delayed Wholesale Grocers' Trial Being Heard Before Justice Falconbridge at Toronto This Week—Counsel Intimate That Matter Will Be This Time Carried Through—A Week for the Crown's Evidence.

The now-become-famous Grocers' Guild case, which came up first in the Hamilton police court two and a half years ago, and which has been hanging fire through one pretext or another ever since, at last stands a promising chance of being settled pro or con. It will be remembered that the case came up before Chief Justice Falconbridge in the Special Assize Court, at the City Hall, Toronto, some three weeks ago, but at that time only a nibble was taken of the matter. The hearing was resumed on Monday, Oct. 19th, in the same court and from the statements of E. F. B. Johnston, chief counsel for the defendants, it is learned that it is the purpose finally to carry the case through to the end.

The Indictment in Full.

The indictment, which heretofore has not been published in full, reads as follows:

1. "To unduly limit the facilities in producing, manufacturing, supplying and dealing in sugar, tobacco starch, canned goods, salt and cereals and other articles and commodities which are the subject of trade and commerce.

2. "And to unduly prevent, limit and lessen the manufacture and production of such articles and commodities.

4. "And to unreasonably enhance the price of such articles and commodities.

5. "And to unduly prevent, and lessen competition in the production, manufacture, purchase, barter, sale and supply of such articles and commodities, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our Lord the King."

George Tate Blackstock, K.C., and S. F. Washington, K.C., appeared for the Crown and E. F. B. Johnston, K.C., H. S. Ambrose and Eric Armour represented the defendants.

Bringing Out Sugar Arrangement.

The evidence presented on Monday was practically an effort on the part of the Crown to show that in 1897 and 1898 the Dominion Guild and the Ontario Guild had made an arrangement with the sugar refiners to supply at fixed prices only those who were recognized by the Guilds as strictly wholesale grocers.

J. Stanley Cook, cretary of the Dominion Guild, was iestioned regarding agreements entered into with various manufacturers setting forth conditions under which goods should be supplied. He explained that the Price Committee of the Guild simply advised manufacturers as to who were generally recognized by the trade as wholesale grocers. The principle upon which the Guild acted was that to obtain goods at wholesale prices a merchant must be recognized by the trade as a wholesale grocer and must convince the manufacturer that he is such.

"Are not the Price Committee judges of who shall be allowed to purchase direct from the manufacturers," he was asked.

"No, I would not say so. They are and they are not. It depends on the manufacturers, who have necessarily some say in the matter. The Price Committee simply makes a representation to the manufacturers as to who are recognized by the trade as wholesale grocers."

Who Are Wholesalers?

"But who decides whether a firm is wholesale or not if there is a dispute?" queried Mr. Blackstock.

"It is a question between the trade and the Guild," answered the witness.

Mr. Washington created some amusement by trying to fathom some of the intricacies of beginning a wholesale business.

"Suppose I wanted to go into the wholesale business in Hamilton, what would I do?"

"Get the money first."

"Assume I had the money, what would I do?"

"The first thing would be to apply to the manufacturer for permission to buy his goods."

"Would not the first thing be to apply to the Hamilton Guild and become a member?"

"Yes, I suppose, if you wanted to work with the run of the trade."

"And they would determine whether I should be allowed to become a member or not?"

"They would."

"Then my opponents in trade have the say as to whether I shall be a member or not?"

"The members of the Guild decide the matter."

"And if they accept me they notify the manufacturer that I am entitled to get goods under this agreement?"

"They notify him that you are a recognized wholesaler."

"Then I have to get the consent of the Price Committee before I get goods?"

"No."

"The agreement says so?"

"Only if the manufacturer is satisfied that you are a wholesaler."

Mr. Washington then referred to an agreement between the Guild and John W. Bickle & Greening, agents for King Oscar sardines.

"Under this agreement," he said, "I cannot buy goods unless my name is on this list?"

"Practically. The principle followed is that you must be a wholesaler, and the trade must be united in regarding you as such."

"If a man is not a wholesaler how is he to get on the list?"

"If he can convince the manufacturers he will get on."

"Have you ever known of a man who was able to convince a manufacturer in opposition to the price committee?"

"I do not know that such a case has ever arisen. It is not likely to arise."

Complain of Small Profits.

A number of letters were read from the price committee of the Guild to Jason S. Creed, Halifax; Bates, Peacock & Co., Hamilton; Wm. Clark, Montreal, and to starch, soap, cereal and other manufacturers, complaining that the wholesale grocery business was being run at less than an equable working profit.

Other letters from the price committee advised the members to hold off doing business with certain canned meat packers until they could be persuaded to enter into agreements satisfactory to the Guild.

A circular from the secretary of the Quebec Guild stated that prices had been fixed on Horseshoe, Maple Leaf, Clover Leaf, Arrow and Lowe Inlet salmon from June 29, 1905, till Sept. 15, 1906.

A report of the sugar committee was also read telling of an interview with the Ontario Sugar Co., Berlin. The company was favorable to dealing with the members of the Guild, though up to that time it had not been found profitable to do so.

A Host of Letters.

The Crown then produced an old letter book containing letters and circulars sent out in 1897 by the late W. H. Gillard, of Hamilton, at that time president of the Dominion Guild, and by H. C. Beckett, to secretaries of provincial Guilds, members and manufacturers.

Mr. Johnson objected to the reading of these, saying the authenticity of the authorship had not been proven. In the absence of a jury, His Lordship admitted these, subject to the objection.

The majority of the letters referred to the system of selling sugar at that time in vogue, and showed the struggle that was experienced in getting the sugar business on a satisfactory basis. As the reading proceeded the movement toward the "Equalized Rates System" at present in force, was evidenced, and the difficulties experienced in the first application of the system were seen to be great.

One letter, dated 18th December, 1897, states that the Hamilton branch of the Guild had decided to support the London trade in their objection to John Garvey being a member, as it was understood at that time he was conducting a retail department, and to prevent, if possible, his buying sugar direct from the refiners. Other letters addressed to manufacturers and officers of the Guild had reference to the striking of names of certain firms off the list to be supplied direct from the manufacturers.

An Assiduous Letter Writer.

"The president seems to have been very assiduous in writing letters," observed his Lordship, as Mr. Washington proceeded to read a long series of letters, in which Mr. Gillard emphasized the necessity of the sugar agreement being adhered to.

In one letter Mr. Gillard enclosed a draft of a proposed agreement between the sugar refiners and the wholesale grocers in Ontario and Quebec, to the effect that the members of the Guild should receive a rebate of one-sixteenth of a cent per pound on all purchases, and a discount of 3½ per cent. on the total amount. A host of letters explaining the working out of this system followed.

A bunch of other letters referred to breaches of the agreement regarding tobacco between the Guild and the manufacturers.

More trouble evidently followed in the sugar business, for a letter from Mr. Gillard to R. G. Macpherson, M.P., called attention to the fact that T. B. Greening & Co., of Hamilton, had decided to enter the sugar business, and that as they were outside the Guild's agreement they would be in a position to sell imported yellow sugar at a lower price than that listed. Mr. Macpherson was asked to use his influence with the Government in order to support the efforts of the Guild to prevent dangerous competition. "The trade will have to again fall back into the slough of despond," the letter stated, "unless the Government comes to our aid with a larger share of bounty."

The matter was evidently happily settled by local influences, for a later letter stated that T. B. Greening & Co. had agreed to sell the balance of their imported yellow sugar to members of the Guild and to import no more.

In another letter of "correction," written by Mr. Gillard to a firm of manufacturers who had shipped goods in a way not in accordance with the arrangement made by the Guild. He said, "The wholesale trade are united on tobacco and sugar."

A Troublesome Firm.

In a letter to Geo. Robertson & Co., Kingston, Mr. Gillard said that he regretted that that firm would not observe the terms of the sugar agreement. "The system is working in Toronto and Hamilton like a charm," the letter continued, "and if you will observe the terms all the other firms in Kingston will do the same. The present condition of the sugar trade is a positive drag to legitimate business."

Geo. Robertson & Sons seem to have been considerable of a thorn in the side of the Guild at this time. This firm seemed to be the turning point on which the adherence to the sugar agreement in Kingston depended. Members of the Guild, as was evidenced in letters read, paid a visit to Kingston to bring Mr. Robertson to time, but found him away. The reason he gave for not wishing to observe the agreement was that he had not faith in other houses keeping to it.

As a result letters were sent to the sugar refiners, explaining the situation and asking that one or two firms whose wholesale standing was questionable, be cut off the list of direct buyers, in the hope of inducing Mr. Robertson to come in.

Arranging the Equalized Rates System.

In another letter to a Windsor firm Mr. Gillard stated that the sugar arrangement was not working satisfactorily, and that a meeting of the Dominion Guild would be held shortly in Montreal, at which it was hoped to arrive at a conclusion that would be satisfactory. Mr. Beckett, in Mr. Gillard's absence, wrote to the three firms of sugar refiners in August, 1898, suggesting that if the refiners contemplated making a reduction in the price of sugar, the change should be held over until the new system was ready, with a view to facilitating its introduction.

In another letter to wholesale firms, Mr. Beckett suggested the advisability of the wholesalers contributing to the cost of preparing circulars for distribution among the trade, calling attention to the new equalized rate system of selling sugar, adopted at a meeting of the trade in Toronto. "Undoubtedly," the letter ran, "the new plan will put thousands of dollars into the pockets of the wholesale houses, and they can well afford to meet any calls that may be made upon them."

Too Much News in the Grocer.

Another letter which caused some little interest in the court was one from Mr. Gillard to Hugh Blain, Toronto, in reference to articles on the new system of sugar selling which had appeared from time to time in The Canadian Grocer.

"The editor of this paper," the letter read, "seems to get hold of everything we do, no matter how quiet we keep it. There must be a leak somewhere, for how he gets this I don't know. The publication of such articles only tends to unsettle the retail trade." Mr. Blain was asked to get the ear of the editor and to try to get him to treat the affairs of the Guild more carefully.

The reading of these letters was continued till the hour of adjournment on Monday.

RESUMED ON TUESDAY MORNING.

The reading of letters selected from the Guild's official correspondence was resumed on Tuesday morning. The trend of the letters went to show that the late W. H. Gillard, President of the Dominion Guild, was very active in his efforts to prevent the cutting of prices, both on sugar and tobacco. The Guild was striving, according to the correspondence, for a uniformity of prices in these goods, with a view to bettering the trade in general. In numbers of cases the letters told of pressure brought to bear in various ways upon different wholesale or wholesale and retail grocers who were not holding to the terms of the Guild agreements.

One of the first letters of note was to John Garvey, London, who seems to have caused the Guild a good deal of trouble at this time, to the effect that he was "not at liberty to sell tobacco or any other articles on which there are fixed prices by the Guild or manufacturers at less than the fixed price. As you know this is a condition which all those enjoying the privileges of the sugar arrangement must carry out."

Some Breezy Letters.

Some of Mr. Beckett's letters were of rather a breezy type. Just at this time the Jas. Lumbers Co., Toronto, seems to have been giving the Guild some trouble through their refusal to adhere to the sugar agreement. A letter from Mr. Beckett to Mr. Culter, of the Acadia Sugar Co., speaks in brisk terms of what he called the "pig-headed" attitude of Mr. Lumbers. "The only way we can deal with him," he said, "is to get the refiners to inform him that unless he carries out the arrangement he cannot get any Canadian sugar, and as he cannot get along without Canadian sugar, he would soon be brought into line."

In a later letter to Mr. Laporte, Montreal, Mr. Gillard stated that "if the trade in the two Provinces (Ontario and Quebec) are true to each other, our efforts should prove a complete and permanent solution of the whole sugar grievance."

Mr. Blackstock then read a letter sent out by Mr. Gillard to the wholesale trade, enclosing a circular in which he explained that the rebate of 2½ per cent. given by the refiners would only be paid on condition that the buyer confined his business exclusively to buying Canadian refined sugar under the terms of the agreement.

Following this, a letter to Joseph Grant, Ottawa, informed him that he must observe the rules in regard to the price of sugar or he would forfeit his rebate.

"If you will look up your little book you will see what the price really is."

The Working of the System.

There seems to have been some difficulty among houses in various parts of the country in understanding the workings of the sugar selling system. A letter illustrating this to Baskerville Bros., Ottawa, said: "The object of this system is that there will be a price for sugar for each town in Ontario and Quebec west of Montreal, and including the City of Montreal, and the price is ascertained by adding to the refiners' price at Montreal the amount found opposite the different points on the equalized rate system for wholesale houses in the country using the same book. It follows that every wholesale house in the country will be quoting exactly the same price in that town, thereby doing away with all the competition and cutting, and avoiding the necessity of having to sell sugar at cost, as we have all hitherto had to do."

Further light was given in a letter to M. Carton, Peterboro, which said that if he would adhere to the sugar agreement the refiners would pay him 2½ per cent. rebate, on his monthly purchases always keeping back two months' rebate due. "Remember," said the letter, "that the refiners say nothing about the 2½ per cent. rebate in their invoices, and they pay it only to those who are in the agreement."

"It cost over $2,000 to get this arrangement going," said the letter, and Mr. Carton was asked to contribute, under the promise that he would soon make up the amount if he came in.

Another letter t Broissard & Co., St. Catharines, com ined of them making wagon deliverie of sugar to Thorold and Merritton a St. Catharines prices, and warned them that they must adhere to the equalized rates system.

Uniform Tobacco Prices.

The next series of letters showed an attempt on the part of the Guild to make an arrangement with Sir William Macdonald, Montreal, whereby tobacco prices might be kept uniform in Quebec and Ontario.

In a letter to D. Stewart, confidential agent for Mr. Macdonald, Mr. Gillard asked him to use his influence with Mr. Macdonald to give his moral and active support to enable the trade to establish uniform prices on tobacco in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec. "The advance named by the Guild on manufacturers' price duty and excise paid is four cents 30 days, or one per cent, discount for cash in ten days, which, after freight, incidentals and one per cent. are considered, leaves little or no profit when the cost of distribution, the general expense of doing business and guarantee against losses are taken into account."

The blame for the cutting was laid at the door of Goldstein & Co., Scales & Wilson and other small firms.

"The object of their slaughtering prices in this insane manner is to sesure other orders in cigars and pipes, upon which they make large profits. If it is to be stopped it must be by pressure from the manufacturers," said a later letter.

Another letter from Mr. Gillard to W. C. MacDonald, expressed the hope that some measure of protection would be given to the wholesale grocers on Macdonald's tobacco; otherwise, it stated, "it will be only a question of a short time when the keen competition will force the prices down to cost."

Getting a Firm Into Line.

Geo. Robertson & Sons, Kingston, came in for some more attention at this time and letter after letter was sent to them trying to get them to come into the Guild or to adhere to the sugar agreement, considerable pressure was evidently brought to bear to force the firm to come to time. In a letter to Mr. Hendry, of Fenwick, Hendry & Co., of Kingston, that gentleman was urged to do what he could "to bring Robertson back into the fold." Various means were suggested among others that the freight rates should be fixed so that he would be forced to sell sugar at cost or less. Another letter to W. G. Craig on the same subject says:

"If all the machinery at the disposal of the Guild were put in motion Robertson would soon have to fall in line. It seems to me a very simple matter to make Robertson come in. I hope the refiners will use all the power they can. He deserves no consideration when he shows none."

"He has got to be severely dealt with," said another letter, "and I am sure the refiners will not allow him to break up an arrangement which means so much to them."

Another letter referring to Geo. Robertson & Sons, said:

"We have reason to hope that he will humbly bow to the mighty voice of the great majority."

"Which he did," added the Crown Attorney jokingly.

"And what they are all doing," added E. F. B. Johnston.

After all the influence seemed to fail a policy of letting him alone was inaugurated. This seemed to do the work for another letter said: "He is beginning to realize he is not such a tremendous factor in the sugar trade as he thought he was."

Later on a letter to W. G. Craig said: "Robertson does not seem as bitter as he was, and I think he will come ultimately into the fold. Some one loaded him up with the idea that we would burst in a short time and he was afraid of the system. He will fall in line in time."

As a result of the treatment the troublesome firm did finally come into line and according to a later letter, gave instructions to their travelers to sell sugar according to the equalized rates system.

Conditions of Guild Membership.

A. MacLean, Kingston, was informed that he could not be received as a member of the Guild unless he did a strictly wholesale business and had the consent of the other Kingston wholesalers.

"The usual fee for coming into the Guild is $100," read a letter to another outsider.

Referring again to tobacco Mr. Gillard wrote a wholesaler to the effect that Sir W. C. Macdonald, Montreal, had consented to assist the wholesale trade in establishing uniform prices on his tobaccos.

Again, in the beginning of 1899 Mr. Gillard informed several wholesale grocers that, if the Guild terms were not observed in regard to the sale of tobacco, W. C. Macdonald would refuse to supply the offenders with any more goods.

The afternoon session was taken up chiefly with the reading of letters regarding the tobacco business. Several of these showed that Sir William Macdonald had expressed himself as prepared to support the wholesale trade in their efforts to preserve the Guild prices on tobacco.

In later correspondence Mr. Gillard referred to starch business, and saying that several firms were selling at less than list prices, and further, that the tobacco agreement was not being adhered to.

Equalized Rates Come Into Effect.

The rules regulating the rates for the sale of refined sugar in Ontario, which came into force after April 15, 1905, were read by the Crown Attorney. These set forth that a strict compliance with the arrangement was essential on the part of every wholesale house in order to make the system efficient. Sales must be made strictly in accordance with the equalized rates system.

Cutting on Matches.

A complaint arose at this time that some houses were selling Eddy's matches at a price lower than was thought equable. J. Stanley Cook, the secretary of the Dominion Guild, stated that the matter was not one to be dealt with by the Guild, but was a matter of contract between the manufacturer and the individual wholesaler.

A letter from Mr. Cook, dated Nov. 14, 1904, called Mr. Beckett's attention to the effect that the Ontario Sugar Co., of Berlin, were selling sugar in Quebec outside the Guild members, and said that the trade in Montreal were not disposed to allow this to continue. If the practice were continued, he intimated, that the Guild would have to cancel its agreements with the company and call on its members to decline to sell the Ontario Co.'s sugar.

Toward the end of the afternoon a number of letters, dated, 1904 and 1905, were gone over, making complaint of price-cutting and other violations of the Guild agreement in several lines. The reading of this mass of correspondence is beginning to get rather wearisome, but a good-sized budget yet remains to be gone over. At the adjournment of the court Crown Attorney Blackstock intimated that the presentation of the Crown's case would at least occupy this week.

Wednesday Morning's Session.

On Wednesday morning Mr. Washington continued his reading of the correspondence between officers of the Dominion and Provincial Guilds and various manufacturers. Some letters were read addressed to Sir Wm. Macdonald relating to the prices of Macdonald's tobaccos. According to the agreement, if any wholesale grocers sold the tobacco at a lower price than that on the list, Macdonald would refuse to supply them.

Arranging for Canned Goods.

The efforts of the trade to secure an arrangement for the sale of canned goods at a profit were next dealt with. In 1905, the Canadian Canners, Limited, agreed that if the wholesale grocers adhered to the list prices and bought their canned goods and vegetables during 1905 exclusively from that company they would give a rebate of five per cent. Another score of letters read by the Crown counsel related to overtures made by Messrs. Beckett and J. Stanley Cook on behalf of the Guild to Tuckett of Hamilton and the Hudson's Bay Company, with the view of arranging a fixed selling price for their tobaccos.

"My idea," wrote Mr. Beckett to Mr. Cook, "is that plug tobaccos should be sold at manufacturers' list prices, and that the profit of the wholesale trade come in the shape of a rebate from Tuckett just the same as it does from the Empire Company. The net result of my plan would be that Winnipeg would be getting one cent more than they are getting now in their trade in Macdonald's and Tuckett's in the Northwest."

A Rebate on Tobacco.

The result of the negotiations was that Tuckett agreed to give a rebate to the wholesale trade of five per cent. per pound on plug tobaccos, and ten per cent. on cut tobaccos, payable quarterly. The Hudson's Bay Company, however, declined to make any concessions.

In a letter to J. N. Ellis, secretary of the British Columbia Wholesale Grocers' Exchange, Mr. Beckett explained that Tucketts' were desiring of assisting the trade in their efforts to make a fair margin on their goods, recognizing that such action was necessary.

J. Stanley Cook, secretary of the Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Exchange, was again called to identify correspondence referring to the application of a merchant named Beddingfield, of Ottawa, for membership in the Guild. Asked why Beddingfield was not allowed to join the Guild, witness stated that he was not admitted because he was not a wholesale grocer. He was in the retail business; although he professed to be a jobber. Hunter & Co., Pembroke, and F. G. Castle, Ottawa, were refused membership for the same reason.

Withholding the Rebates.

"I want to ask you now about the fining of members," said Mr. Washington. "I see from this correspondence that one of the travelers of the firm of Turcotte had sold their goods in New Brunswick at Quebec rates and that the firm was fined $100."

"They were not fined. The manufacturers simply withheld the rebate to the extent of $100."

"Under the arrangement with the refiners they were entitled to hold back their rebates?"

"Certainly."

"How many have been fined?"

"I think there was only one case."

"What became of these fines? Were they paid to the Guild?"

"No."

Mr. Johnston.—The letters say that fines were asked for. They do not say that fines were imposed.

The Provincial Grocers.

A file of correspondence was read by Mr. Washington referring to the efforts of the Guild to protect the trade against the unfair competition of the Provincial Grocers, Mr. Laporte, the president, explaining that "Provincial Grocers are a combination of retailers who are anxious to cut out the wholesalers. The Provincial Grocers have done more to injure the wholesale trade since they started than any other company. They are a continual menace, and the wholesale trade consider they are entitled to protection."

These representations decided the Canada Sugar Co. should not sell to the Provincial Grocers. Other letters which passed between Guild officers and various manufacturers, saying who should and who should not be supplied direct were read.

Crosse & Blackwell, when written to by the secretary with regard to supplying retailers direct, replied that they would sell their goods to "wholesalers, jobbers, retailers and anybody else who paid the price."

Answering a question, Mr. Cook said that "practically" all the grocery wholesalers in Canada were members of the Guild. The Canada Brokerage Co. applied for admission, but were refused. A lot of correspondence between the secretary and the St. Lawrence Sugar Refining Co., the Canada Sugar Refining Co., and the Acadia Sugar Refining Co., with reference to supplying James Lumbers, Toronto, with sugar was read. Lumbers was not a member. He refused to sign the agreement that other wholesalers signed. He sold sugar to the St. Catharines trade at less than the listed price. Lumsden Bros., Hamilton, also figured in the letters, and the matter of the sale of Redpath sugar to a Barrie retailer through the Canada Brokerage Co. was also a matter of correspondence.

More Price-Cutting.

There were numerous complaints of cutting prices by firms in various parts of the country, and Mr. Cook, the secretary, wrote many letters dealing with these. The position of firms outside the Guild, and of firms which had resigned membership, was defined in one of the secretary's letters: "The Guild," he wrote, "has always taken the position that we are perfectly willing that certain firms who refuse to join the Guild may be allowed by the refiners to buy direct, but we do not think it would be fair to continue to supply those who had been members of the Guild, but who had resigned membership."

The price of salt and starch in Montreal and throughout Quebec Province was dealt with in one letter from a Montreal officer and an effort was made to make a list in that province similar to the Ontario agreement.

Wednesday afternoon's session was occupied by the reading of correspondence along lines similar to that heretofore presented and an examination of J. Stanley Cook, the secretary of the Guild, regarding the working out of the business of the Guild. A full report of this will be given in next week's issue.

THE GROCER'S WIFE.

Truly the helpmate of the grocer deserves a good deal of attention at the hands of the trade press, for she it is who exercises the greatest influence over his life and its course, from the lady who clerks in her husband's store to the richly clad fair one who sweeps into the palatial offices of the rich city merchant, along the entire line of gradation between.

The wife of the grocer may be a tower of strength or a source of weakness, depending upon her personality and her will. She may help him almost infinitely, or she may be a drag upon him. We know a grocer's wife who helps. She does not clerk in the store, for he does not need her there. His business prospers, but through her personal appearance behind the counter. But she is a lady of ability and charm. She has made friends of the entire community of people. They know her and know she is willing to help in anything which pertains to community life and prosperity.

She is cheerful and ready to assist the needy, and her home life with her husband and small family is a lesson to others. While her assistance is not of the direct kind, nevertheless it is far from small. She has established her family as one of the best in the part of the town in which they live and elevated the reputation of her husband above that of a mere purveyor of groceries into the dignity of a merchant who has the best interests and welfare of his town at heart.

She has not done this without his assistance, but without her influence he would never have thought of half the things he does and which help to establish him, not only as a man but as a business man. She has given tone to his store, which is something worth doing.

We know of another grocer's wife who helps him with suggestions. To her he takes his business difficulties. She is a silent partner, but none the less effective. Her advice is shrewd and excellent. She is clear-sighted and wise. She sees things from a viewpoint, different perhaps from his, but none the less valuable. She directs the window trimming, and because she has taste, she gets up good ones. Her suggestions are always to the point and full of meat. Such a wife is of inestimable advantage to any man, whether he be grocer or not. There are others who help in other capacities. Some of them are clerks par excellence. They put their hearts into the work. All cannot do the same thing, but there is none who cannot do something of advantage for the business.

There are others, we are sorry to say, who look down on the trade as something to be ashamed of. There are those who hang limp and not help lift. Their husbands have a handicap. However, we think the majority of grocers' wives are of great assistance, and without them the business would languish.

The young grocer should be married. It helps him greatly in business, if he gets the right kind and the wrong kind would burden him anyhow whether he were in the grocery business or some other walk of life.—Oregon Tradesman.

Archdale Wilson, manufacturer of fly pads, Hamilton, accompanied by Mrs. Wilson and daughter, sails from New York on November 6th for Europe. He will spend six weeks in Italy and eight or ten weeks in the south of France, returning to Canada early in March.

GROCERY SPECIALISTS ORGANIZE

Members of United States Trade Form Association in New York.

New York, Oct. 19.—At the close of a protracted meeting at which a variety of views were expressed the National Association of Grocers' Specialties was formed last Thursday at the Waldorf-Astoria, in this city. Considerable secrecy surrounded the meeting, and little disposition existed on the part of the promotion of the project to discuss the matter. It was learned, however, that a partial organization was effected.

W. H. Duff, of P. Duff & Sons, Pittsburg, was chosen treasurer, and at a later meeting other officers wil be elected. An executive committee is also to be selected.

The association is formed primarily for the purpose of bettering conditions in the grocers' specialties trade. The constitution as formally adopted proposes the elimination of abuses in the trade, and the enactment of laws deemed equitable for the promotion of trade. Nearly 100 members of the trade from all sections of the country attended yesterday's meeting.

HINTS TO BUYERS.

Reading notices under this heading will be accepted at 10 cents per agate line.

Laporte, Martin & Co., Montreal, are offering grocers particularly advantageous prices on dried fruits, of which they have just received their first consignment. This lot includes finest raisins, currants, figs, peels and other lines which will be in demand from this on. Their new crop teas are worth investigating also. Discriminating buyers will secure their quotations before ordering.—Advt.

A line that should be of particular interest to grocers and which often yields them better profits than the strictly staple food lines, is that of the specialty or household utensil branch. A new article along this line is being placed on the market by Tarbox Bros., Toronto, in the shape of a new duster, the "Ideal," which is meeting with much favor. The same firm's self-wringing mop first advertised in this paper over 18 years ago, has proven of advantage to the trade and the new duster can be recommended to give similar satisfaction. The advertisement of the new appliance appears elsewhere in this issue.

Do not forget that prompt service covers a multitude of sins. Courtesy costs you nothing and makes money always. The best advertisement any merchant can have is a reputation for prompt service and courtesy. The more people you please, the more you can sell goods to. Pleasing is one of the arts of business, and business is your mission in the store.

News of the Montreal Trade—Large Shipments of Lobsters and Apples From Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

MONTREAL.

Oct. 20.—Gravel Freres, corner of McGill College Ave. and St. Catherine Sts., have a very fine window display of mineral waters this week.

Many grocers in this city have suffered considerable inconvenience this year from operations on the streets. In many cases not only have the sidewalks been piled up with dirt, but the air in the neighborhood has been permeated with a nauseating odor, which certainly has not rendered the community an attractive one.

S. T. Nishimura, of the firm of S. T. Nishimura, tea merchants of Japan and Montreal, sails shortly for Canada from Yokohama by the Empress of India. Mr. Nishimura will be in Canada for some months during which time he will call on the trade.

One of the daily newspapers has a very elaborate and ingeniously arranged window display of Western wheat. Sheaves and festoons are arranged with the native grasses and the floor of the window is covered with the threshed wheat.

A description appeared some time ago in these columns regarding the use to which a grocer had put the posts in his store. This described the arrangement of circular shelves around the posts which were filled up with canned goods. Another grocer in the city has gone his brother in trade one better, and arranged cases around the posts with glass doors in which he keeps his flavoring extracts, and many small bottle goods. This is an excellent idea, as many of the more expensive lines with fine labels are preserved from dirt and dust, and at the same time are in excellent view.

Charles Jerome, corner of Aqueduct and St. Antoine Sts., has a neatly arranged pickle display this week.

HALIFAX.

October 19.—Business is quite brisk in some lines at the present time. Large quantities of flour, meal, sugar, tea, etc., are being sent into the outlying districts before the winter sets in. Collections on the whole are good, and business, generally speaking, is quite satisfactory. The commission men are busy, and a large quantity of fruit is being turned over. The prices for apples this season are very reasonable, and as a result a large quantity are being handled locally.

Butter is very firm and shows a slight advance, creamery now being quoted at 26½c. Eggs are in good supply and are selling at 22c.

C. E. Choate, the Gottingen Street grocer, is retiring from business, and is going on a visit to his old home in England. Mr. Choate was one of the most active young business men in the city, and his loss will be greatly felt in the city. He had one of the finest retail grocery stores in the north end of the city, the business being well established, and he enjoyed a large and first-class trade. His health, however, is failing and he is going to another climate, hoping that the change will be beneficial. The business has been taken over by Walter Share and D. H. Campbell, two of the hustling young clerks, who have been in Mr. Choate's employ for some years, and they will, no doubt, keep the business up to its usual high standard.

Large quantities of produce are now being forwarded from Prince Edward Island ports to the Montreal market. The steamer Campania, sailing from Summerside this week, took away a record cargo. Stored in her holds were 75,000 bushels of potatoes, 300 barrels of oysters and a large quantity of eggs, cheese and canned goods. The oyster fishery on the island this year is said to be very good. Eggs are easier at Summerside, being quoted at 17c, and butter from 20c to 23c per pound.

The steamer Jacona, which annually brings dried fruit from Spain to Halifax and Montreal, left Cadiz on Monday last for Halifax. She will be due here about the 26th inst. After discharging fruit here she will proceed to Montreal.

The steamer M. C. Holm sailed this week with fifteen thousand barrels of potatoes for Havana.

The shipments of apples for the London market continue very heavy. London City, sailing this week, took 1,000 barrels, and the Almeriana took away 18,000 barrels.

George H. Teaton, of the firm of Geo. H. Teaton & Sons, confectionery manufacturers, of Hantsport, N.S., died very suddenly last week, while on a business trip to Springhill. He was 56 years of age.

Last week's fish shipments from St. Johns, Nfld., amounted to 32,967 quintals, as against 27,764 quintals the previous week. There were also exported 422 cases of lobsters, 137 tierces of salmon, and 53 barrels of herring and trout.

Heavy shipments of fresh mackerel are now being made from Nova Scotia ports to the American market.

The fishery inspectors throughout Nova Scotia have been notified of a change in the regulations governing gill net smelt fishing. The season this year is earlier than heretofore, commencing on Oct. 15, instead of Nov. 1, and concluding on Feb. 15. The smelt fishing industry has grown to a large and lucrative enterprise throughout Cape Breton Island, and also on Prince Edward Island, during the past few years. New York and Boston are excellent markets and practically all this kind of fish caught in Cape Breton waters is shipped to these centres.

NEWCASTLE, N.B.

Oct. 20.—This season has been hard on small merchants. Thomas Abraham, of Newcastle, general merchant, has assigned to Sheriff O'Brien. Archibald McNair, of Campbellton, general merchant, has assigned to W. S. Loggie, of Chatham.

The potato crop has been especially good this year. In Shediac potatoes are now selling at 60c to 85c a barrel. In Carleton County the crop was twice as good this summer as last.

WHAT THEY THINK OF IT.

The following are a couple of letters received during the week giving some idea of how last week's special number is regarded among the trade:

"Allow us to congratulate you on attaining your majority. If every young Canadian could present such a handsome face on his 21st birthday we would indeed be proud. Your coming-of-age number is a fitting climax to all the good things that have gone before, and is a suit of clothes that will keep you well occupied to fill as the years go on.

"On every side grocers are speaking of it in highly flattering terms, and say candidly that it is the best special number of any trade paper they ever saw. I think congratulations are due from your advertising patrons for the handsome way in which their display ads. are presented."—Hamilton correspondent.

"The coming-of-age edition of The Canadian Grocer is highly praised by its London readers. Treasurer E. J. Ryan, of the Retail Grocers' Association, said to your correspondent: 'It is the best publication of the kind I have ever seen. I get a Chicago trade journal, but it does not compare with your regular issues, while its special editions are not in it with this week's number of The Canadian Grocer.'"—London correspondent.

Retail Grocers' Pure Food Show a Sp lendid Success—Niagara Grapes Selling Well on Vancouver Mar ket—Good Tobacco Crop.

VANCOUVER.

Oct. 17.—The Pure Food Show, under the auspices of the Vancouver Retail Grocers' Association is being held this week. All the space in the Dominion Hall is taken up, the color scheme being in white with gold lettering, the effect being exceedingly tasteful. The show is on a much larger scale than that of a year ago, and is appreciated by the public who are able to see just what is manufactured at home. A full account of this event will appear in these pages next week.

The Niagara grapes, which were put on the market recently, found a ready sale, the reds at 35c and the blues at 50c per basket. The package is more than an incidental to the sale. On the coast, the square package is used without a handle of any sort. If one buys, it is awkward to carry the purchase, and for this reason the handy basket with the handle in which Niagara grapes are put up, is very convenient.

Brackman & Ker are bringing timothy hay for the first time from Western Alberta to Vancouver. It is quoted at $18 a ton, and though the price is somewhat higher than the local, it is considered that the better quality warrants the better figure.

Market Clerk Kelly states that the patronage at the city market is steadily increasing, and new stalls are being put up every week. The best feature of the market is that it has a tendency to eliminate the Chinese vegetable itinerant. There is room for good work along this line, and if this is done there will not be so much cutting into the business done by the stores generally. The products of white people are given first place at the market, and if a good trade can be worked up at a central point like this it may mean that more people will get into the business as the demand increases.

Evidence is constantly coming to hand of the favorableness of Pacific Coast waters for the growth of lobsters and oysters. The oyster subject was commented on a few weeks ago in these columns, when it was remarked that bivalves grown on this coast were the principal article sold here now. Some time ago mention was made of the discovery of a lobster on Salt Spring Island in the Gulf of Georgia, and this week news comes from Puget Sound, of the catch in a gill net of a lobster eighteen inches long. This was one of a number planted by the Government in the Sound, and that the lobster had thrived demonstrates the practicability of an industry along that line. It is stated by many fishermen that the waters on the lower British Columbia abound in depredatory fish, especially the octopus, and that lobsters especially form a fine morsel for him. Devil fish are caught from time to time, showing that the fear is not unfounded by any means.

The fact that onions are imported in large quantities has caused growers in this province to turn their attention to the cultivation of this necessary product. Hales Bros., who have a section of fruit lands, near Kamloops, have a fine sample of Yellow Globe Danvers which they grew. These weigh from three-quarters of a pound to a pound apiece. The crop yielded over 20 tons to the acre and was marketed in the Northwest, bringing eight cents per pound, and netting over $3,000. With results such as these, it is probable that many more will cultivate not only onions but the smaller vegetables which many forget about in the great rush for fruit lands.

The tobacco crop, according to reports from the Okanagan, is in fine condition and it is expected that the leaf this year will be better than ever. A few years ago United States connoisseurs who inspected some of the tobacco grown in this province would hardly believe it was not grown in Cuba, because of the excellent quality. The new factory, which has been established at Kelowna, will be run on scientific lines, and is bound to win favor for its products.

English capital is being interested in fruit lands near Kamloops. It is proposed to purchase the Sunnyside ranch, and to plant trees on it before placing it on the market. It has been found that it is more satisfactory to have the orchard started than for people to go on the lands themselves and attend to the starting of their trees. Another company, represented by Wm. Reilly, of Vancouver, is buying the Roper ranch for a similar purpose.

Capt. J. J. Logan, manager of the Vancouver Ice and Cold Storage Company; G. C. Hobson, J. W. McFarland, A. F. Perry and W. D. Haywood, of Vancouver; and J. A. Mara and Fred. W. Jones, of Victoria, are the directors of the Pacific Coast Fisheries, a company just incorporated with $300,000 capital; to engage in the fisheries industry in northern waters. The company will have a clam cannery; it will operate a steam trawler and cure edible fish for the market, while the non-edible will be utilized in the manufacture of oil, glue and fertilizers. Spring salmon will also be treated.

GUELPH.

Oct. 20.—C. T. Hicks was not satisfied with getting to the top of the ladder with his horse in the delivery rig class but again showed him at Abroyfoyle show in the roadster class last week and managed to land third money with keen competition.

Dan Scroggie, the official collector for the Merchants' Association, is meeting with good success and many people would rather pay up than see Dan's smiling face at the door. Wonder why?

The O.A.C. records for freshmen are broken this year, 130 new students. You might not think that interests a grocer but it does. The O.A.C. students, like all other good students, have to eat and there are a lot of good grocery accounts out on College Heights. Are you getting your share or making any effort to get it?

O.A.C. butter, 30c; creamery, 27c; dairy, 27c; eggs, 27c; lard, 17c, made a good lively market on Saturday. There was a good attendance both buyers and sellers. The very extraordinary high prices have not been equalled in years and grocers may well watch their accounts as Tom Longboat ain't in the running with a grocery bill when prices are high and the grocer is easy.

Geo. K. Readwin, the west-end grocer, hied himself off to Detroit to see the ball games and has returned with a little more energy to hustle some more.

My, it is interesting to see how the grocers of Guelph are giving us those oyster talks. Just at present we are all at it.

Say, young man, when I buy cocoa I want it and not any dirty, filthy black paper in it, said a very wrathy individual the other day when returning a can of one of our best brands of cocoa to the writer. He could not blame me but that cocoa firm lost a regular customer. He simply would not hear of any explanation that I could offer as the tin was sealed. It was just simply an accident that must have happened where that cocoa was made or else great carelessness on someone's part. The paper was filthy and he had a perfect right to his anger but who is the loser? Not him; not I.

The first car of new canned tomatoes arrived in town this week.

James Burham, of W. H. Fielding's got back to work on Saturday after several days' sickness. Jimmy looks better after the rest.

R. J. McCrea, of J. A. McCrea & Son, has just returned from visiting all the fall fairs in this district on an advertising campaign.

Chas. Barber, manager of Omara's, took in Erin fair on Friday and incidentally bought all the prize as well as other dressed poultry.

One of our leading grocers complains that the campaign of the Chief of Police against short-weight butter has not yet had the effect of ridding the market of all the short-weight produce. He purchased a basket on Saturday, and noticing the small rolls, weighed one then weighed the lot together and only paid the price for what he got. The farmer expressed no surprise, but accepted what was offered. It may be that the action against the chief may encourage farmers in bringing in their butter a little short, and if this is the case some enactment of the law should be made to give the officials power to act. At the same time, gentlemen, there is not the least bit of sympathy for any grocer if he gets short weight butter. He handles tons of butter each year, knows without scales when it is short weight, yet, naturally enough, if it should be a good customer, says nothing, which is nothing more or less than assisting these same people to "do" him regularly. Sometimes he may get even otherwise, but the real genuine way is to hit right out from the shoulder and draw their attention to it. Then if not remedied next time report to the Merchants' Association and have all grocers warned. Never mind the police, when the grocers are notified. Kindly request the farmer to dispose of the butter somewhere else and then the others take up the case and handle it without gloves and the farmer will come back to you a sadder and also a wiser man. It's the united effort that counts and the grocers could handle a lot of this kind of business under a separate head from the Merchants' Association.

The grocers all over Western Ontario and also Northern, who had ever met Alex. Hill will regret to hear of his death here last week. He was one of the men who always had a kind word for everybody from porter to proprietor. For over 20 years he has been in and out doing business among the grocers and no one ever heard him say a mean or unkind word against anyone. He had always that kind, fatherly smile and hearty handshake for everyone. He was picked out by Mr. Massie from a large number of applicants as a traveler. For years he has represented John Sloan & Co., and when he and John Hayden, another representative of the same firm, resided here, it was just a toss-up which got the most of Guelph trade. Mr. Hill was the clerks' favorite and many a time got orders that no other traveler could have got for this reason. He was staunch and true and stayed by the boys in all circumstances and when we did get under the ban from headquarters was a good sympathizer and staunch friend. Many travelers will come and go but none will take his place in the hearts of the older clerks who have known him for so many years as a kind of father to them in the grocery business. The funeral took place on Wednesday last and was very largely attended. Two of the old clerks who have moved up into prominent positions being among the pallbearers; namely, Geo. Walker, of Hugh Walker & Son and Robt. Mitchell, now postmaster. These gentlemen can tell some very kind acts of the deceased in their time in the grocery business. We always will remember him as the most kindly and fatherly traveler.

The smiling countenance of Chas. Smye, of Balfour, Smye & Co., was missed this week off his regular beat. His substitute was a good one but we missed Charley.

HAMILTON.

Oct. 20.—Trade is a little bit quiet just now. Everybody is looking for better times after the elections, the sweet promises that both parties are making just now to the electors in order to catch their votes, will no doubt be fulfilled after Oct. 26—at least some of us are trusting that they will. As voting day approaches excitement begins to warm up and as Hamilton has all the elements to raise a riot we look for a hot old time on Monday night.

The grocers here are once more out after the scalp of the pedlar and huckster. A pedlar here only pays a fee of $5 a year. Now one of them rents a store on the market that costs about 50c a day and after selling all that he can on the market starts out and peddles for the rest of the day. This man will buy a thousand baskets of grapes at a time and other fruits in proportion so that the grocer does not get much chance in competition—although they pay the taxes.

Another move is also on foot to place the people on a credit rating similar to that applied to business men by the commercial agencies. A large amount of labor will be required but if it can be successfully worked out it would prove a great boon to the trade.

One of our handsome city grocery travelers goes hunting rabbits in an automobile, but I suppose it is alright if he has the price.

Our wholesale grocers are still at large, notwithstanding the big trial. Lots of bail here for them if they get into any more trouble.

CHATHAM.

October 20.—J. F. Kennedy, who is now proprietor of the butcher shop at the corner of Park and Prince Streets, has adorned the front of his shop with a handsome new sign.

E. S. Spashett, formerly proprietor of the grocery on Grand Avenue, now conducted by A. J. Wilson, is at present secretary-treasurer of the Pontiac, Mich., Bending Works. He has just attained prominence in the Detroit papers by adopting a young boy deserted by both parents.

The Tecumseh Canning Company has closed down, owing to inability to secure cans. As a result, the Essex factory has been receiving about 1,000 bushels of tomatoes daily, which would have gone to Tecumseh. The Essex output of tomatoes and corn alone this year will exceed 30,000 cases.

Owing to the lateness of the warm weather, "second crops" of berries are being reported from all directions. A Leamington man has just had a heavy second crop of peaches.

As previously intimated, the Canadian branch of the Heinz pickling concern goes to Leamington. The town, however, is to purchase the Ward tobacco factory premises and put in a sewer, at a total cost of $10,000, to exempt the property for 20 years, together with granting certain other minor privileges. A by-law will be submitted to the ratepayers on Nov. 6.

F. R. Webb, of Blemheim, has disposed of his grocery and general store to E. J. Spackman, of Toronto, formerly of Exeter, who recently took possession. Mr. Webb, who purchased the business from A. W. Bell a few years ago, will return to Kingsville.

LONDON.

Oct. 22.—Trade is only fair, last week being quieter than usual. With the passing of the preserving and pickling season grocers look for a lessening of activity.

Local grocers predict unusually high prices for butter and eggs the coming winter. Both commodities, but more particularly eggs, are steadily advancing. Very few eggs have been stored and when dealers begin drawing on this supply the price will advance even more rapidly. Farmers naturally have taken advantage of the competition among large buyers. At present grocers pay 23 cents per dozen for eggs and as the weather grows colder the supply will gradually decrease and the price advance. One grocer predicts the price of eggs will advance to 40c and 50c. Butter, owing to the large output in all parts of the country, is not expected to go so high.

Railway officials report the shipments of apples are becoming heavy. Many carloads of very fine fruit have passed through the city on the way to England and the European markets within the past few days. The western market seems to be developing rapidly, shipments to Winnipeg and other western points being much larger this year than last. The crop in many parts of the country has not been so large as in other years, but growers state that the fruit is of a uniformly high grade and is commanding good prices in all markets. It is estimated that in the next few weeks between 25,000 and 30,000 barrels of apples will be shipped from the London district to various markets. Much hand-picked fruit is being sold by farmers to packers direct.

An immense quantity of potatoes of splendid quality was seen on the market on Saturday, and in consequence of the glut the wholesale price went down to 70c and 75c a bag by the load.

There is now a strong probability of the Canadian Packing Company, whose buildings and plant in the east end were recently destroyed by fire, rebuilding in the city. The City Council, it is said, will offer the company the choice of two sites as an inducement. The location most favored is one at the interswitching line, which would give the company direct connection with all the lines of railway entering the city.

PETERBORO.

October 20.—Last Saturday's market was noted particularly for the number of farmers who were offering for sale light-weight bags of potatoes. The Chief of Police ordered that sample bags from the various wagons be weighed on the market scales, and he placed the standard weight at 91 pounds, allowing one pound for the bag. Although the majority were found to weigh 90 pounds or more, some 55 bags were discovered to be short by three, four, and even six pounds. The owners were arraigned in police court, and although they contended they were not offering the potatoes for sale with the understanding that there were 91 pounds in each bag, they were fined $2 each. The potatoes were not confiscated. Local grocers maintain that the Chief of Police is not justified in compelling farmers to have each bag weigh 91 pounds. Ninety is the limit, they claim.

Some of the Peterboro grocers were last week the victims of a small flim-flam game, perpetrated by a young girl of no more than 10 years of age. Her plans, nevertheless, were cunningly laid and she was successful in "doing" two or three grocers out of several pounds of chocolates. She would call upon a grocer and order several articles to be sent to her alleged home, and each order would include a pound of chocolates, which she would always take with her. On one occasion two delivery wagons called together at the house to which they were directed, only to find that the goods were not ordered by the housewife there and they had to go back with them. This led to an investigation, and it was found that a number of firms had received similar orders. The young girl has not yet been prosecuted.

ST. THOMAS.

Oct. 20.—Saturday's markets were well attended, the exceptional fine weather no doubt assisted materially to that end. The local farmers were quite willing to accept one dollar per bag for potatoes which a short time ago they sold for $1.20, all owing to the fact that several carloads have been brought in by the different grocers, some of whom bought for 70c per bag put in cellar. Other vegetables were in good demand. Apples are likely to advance owing to the extreme dry weather which caused the fruit to drop from the trees before it was fit. They sold at 75c per bag.

The demand for butter was not satisfied at 30c per lb. and eggs were scarce at 25c per dozen. One grocer is retailing Elgin creamery butter at 27c per lb. and gets away with two hundred pounds per day, although he pays 26c, whilst the other grocers sell from 29c to 30c per lb..

The butchers are extending their departments and now handle canned goods, vegetables, teas, etc. One butcher was retailing potatoes at 15c per peck and another was selling for 85c per bag. also dairy butter at 27c per lb. and 18 lbs. granulated sugar for a dollar. If they continue it will disorganize legitimate prices, somebody will fail and the wholesale people who are carrying them have to accept so much on the dollar in settlement.

The peddling case was again remanded, the magistrate apparently taking the view that the by-law regulating the fee is prohibitive although some time ago he found some Toronto parties guilty for the same offense. This is the fourth remand for the Burgess case by the Police Magistrate. The merchants are watching this case closely, as the peddling evil is a menace to all lines of trade and the laws ought to be enforced.

G. R. Renn, grocer, is still confined to the hospital suffering from typhoid fever.

Canned goods of 1908 pack are being taken in stock but in limited quantities by most of the grocers. The quality is good.

INGERSOLL.

October 20.—A young life full of energy and promise was cut short on Saturday morning last when J. S. Smith, manager of Beattie & Co.'s grocery store, succumbed to a short attack of typhoid fever. The announcement of Mr. Smith's sudden death came as a shock to a wide circle of friends and the whole community as well. He had been ill only about two weeks, and for upwards of a week had been a patient in the sanitarium. A few days previous to his death conditions developed which necessitated an operation. This was performed on Friday, and was apparently successful, but the patient did not rally as was expected. The deceased was a native of Scotland and had only been in this country a few years. Prior to coming to Ingersoll he was engaged as a clerk in a grocery store in Berlin. He was attentive to his business, thorough in all his methods and above all, aggressive. He labored zealously in behalf of his firm and the well-stocked and neat appearance of the store was a striking testimony to his industry and genuine business policy. In every particular he was peculiarly adapted to the grocery business and his death at the early age of 28 years is deeply regretted. A sad feature in connection with his death is the fact that none of his relatives reside in Canada. The funeral was held on Monday afternoon from the lodge room of Samaritan Lodge, I.O.O. F., of which order he was a member. Interment was made in the Ingersoll Rural Cemetery, and the attendance was large, being indicative of the high esteem in which the departed was held.

The Christmas trade! Just think of it, only a few weeks distant, and still the sun is shining on this fair Dominion with all the splendor of midsummer. But the white frosts and the penetrating east winds are gentle reminders that it is time to think of winter. The merchants are doubtless turning many things over in their minds. There are supplies to be purchased, probably improvements to be made before the festal season, and these all require mature consideration. The progressive merchant knows the value of giving all these little details plenty of attention. When you see an extraordinarily attractive window, just stop and reflect. The man responsible for its fine appearance and the business which it is pulling used brains and time. This is a combination that is certain to win in any walk of life. If a person has the ability to do a certain thing and will take the time then it will be done properly. Very often hurry-up methods spoil what would otherwise be successful work. Merchants who would have their stores bright and their windows attractive should realize that both brains and time are necessary. Those who are already beginning to give some thought to the Christmas season and the harvest which it brings should first see that their plans are carefully laid and secondly that they receive sufficient attention in execution to bring about the desired result.

It is frequently remarked by merchants that business declines appreciably during an election campaign. Various arguments are advanced in support of this contention and it would seem that this is the case. It is an established fact that when their attention is nightly being taken up by political meetings that the country people will not turn out to town as often as under ordinary conditions. Then again it seems that things in general are in a hesitating condition, the fate of the country being in the balance, not serving to stimulate trade. If all the merchants could "holler" out at once we believe they would announce their pleasure at the thought of the present Federal campaign being terminated on Monday next.

BARRIE.

Oct. 20.—Three cars of sugar in one week is not so bad for this town. Such is the past week's record, one from the Wallaceburg Co., one from the St. Lawrence Co. and one from the Redpath Co.

Wilbour Armstrong, of the Toronto Co-Operative Stores Co., has accepted a position as order canvasser for the grocery department of James Vair & Son.

The local market was a record-breaker on Saturday last, so far as quantities of produce, grain and vegetables were concerned. Butter was very active and sold at from twenty-five to twenty-seven cents, while as high as twenty-eight cents retail was paid. Eggs sold freely at twenty-four and twenty-five cents. Poultry prices were easier on account of the very mild weather and the large quantity offered for sale. Chickens sold from nine to eleven cents a pound, fowl at six and seven, ducks at ten cents and a few turkeys sold at twelve and a half cents a pound. Potatoes were very plentiful and sold as low as forty cents a bag while the general price paid was fifty cents. Apples sold at $1 to $1.50 a barrel, as to quality.

Gren. Calwell, for the Perkins, Ince Co., Toronto, was the lucky man to secure W. P. Soules opening order for groceries, etc., for his new store, which he is opening this week.

James Vair had the misfortune while returning from his trip to the Northwest, to have stolen out of his hand, by a foreigner in Winnipeg, a check for a large sum of money. It detained Mr. Vair four days but he got back the check.

C. Hinds, of Hinds Bros., who has been confined to the hospital here with typhoid fever, is rapidly improving and hopes to be home next week.

Bakogeorge Bros., of the Olympic Candy Kitchen, have leased a large store in Lindsay with a purpose of running a branch confectionery store in that town.

A car of grapes from Winona was unloaded here last Thursday.

Elections are the talk of the street and in fact, everywhere you go just now, and from what your correspondent saw happen the other day it will pay all business men to at least keep their own side of politics to themselves. A certain grocer was talking politics to a customer who had come in and bought and paid for a very nice little order and had told the merchant to send the same order up early. The customer, by the way, did not particularly want to talk politics and was not on the same side as the merchant anyway—but the merchant kept on talking about a certain fine meeting they had had a few nights ago and how in North Simcoe they would trim So and So by 500 majority till the customer got mad and told him a few things. The merchant is now wondering why that man does not come to his store. Well, the moral of this is to keep out "politics talk" around your store either by yourself or your clerks as it will be sure to cause bad friends and lose customers.

TORONTO.

October 20.—The regular monthly meeting of the Retail Grocers' Association, which was held in their rooms in the Temple Building on Monday evening, was one of the most stirring held for months, and if plans formulated at the meeting are carried out—and they give good promise of materializing—the Association promises to assume a new lease of life and to become the power it might and should be among the city's business organizations. One of the evidences of renewed interest was a larger attendance than usual, the extra ones including a couple of old members who have decided to again throw in their interests with the Association and also a couple of new members.

After the passing of some detail business the question of holding the annual at-home as usual this winter was brought up and here the new spirit became evident.

Vice-President Thos. Clark upheld the at-home as a good advertisement for the Association, and a means of getting the grocers together. Several other members expressed themselves as in favor of letting the function drop for a year or two, so that the efforts of the members might be directed along more practical channels.

"What we need in the Association," said R. Van Loan, and the expression was echoed by several of the members present, "is to get busy with something that will help our business. That's how we'll get most out of these meetings and we'll get in new members." B. Snow, J. S. Bond and T. H. Clark spoke strongly along the same lines, throwing out suggestions as to what might be done along practical lines. Ultimately the at-home proposition was voted down.

For some time the members became quite enthusiastic over the stimulus the society is to receive. Plans of advantageous buying were talked of, the suggestion made that something might be done to eliminate the peddling nuisance, which is so troublesome in the city, and various other plans were discussed. It was finally agreed that the first thing to do is to inaugurate an active campaign for new members, and to assist in this new men will be allowed special privileges of membership for a short time.

The Association, if conducted along lines suggested at Monday evening's meeting could be of inestimable service in aiding the grocery trade of Toronto, and it should be supported by every grocer in the city.

Secretary D. Bell, Yonge Street, will be glad to receive the names of any retailers who would like to become members, and will place them before the Association.

EFFECTIVE WINDOW DRESSING

An Easily Built-Up Biscuit Display That Should Attract Good Business—A Design From Cape Breton.

The exceedingly practical and yet attractive biscuit display shown in the engraving on this page, was drawn specially for The Grocer, and forwarded by Jas. H. Dempsey, with A. D. Ingraham, Sydney, C.B. It possesses the qualities of simplicity and ease of arrangement and presents no difficulty nor expense in construction.

The design tells its own story, though a few words of explanation may be helpful. The foundation for the display is a wall of tin boxes of various lines of fancy biscuits, with side walls sloping off to the sides of the window. On top of this is a pyramid of sodas in boxes.

In the forefront of the window on the floor is represented an attractive display of the various lines contained in the boxes. This part of the display may be made to give a very appetizing appearance and to get this the biscuits should be laid on paper of a dainty shade. This display will give a host of suggestions to the passerby and stands a good chance of leaving a mighty good impression on the hungry home-goer, as well as the passing housewife.

WOULDN'T TRUST HIS FEELINGS.

Alderman Frank L. Dowling, of New York, was talking recently about his widely praised ordinance to make it a crime for chauffeurs to take out their masters' motor cars without leave.

"So many accidents have accompanied these stolen rides," said Alderman Dowling, "that the chauffeur has come to be regarded very sceptically. Of course, the great majority of chauffeurs are all right, but there is among them a small minority, a small working minority, which we must trust as a Hoboken grocer treats his trade.

"This grocer is a cash grocer only. If you ask him for credit, he says:

" 'No, sir; no, siree. I wouldn't even trust my own feelings.' "—Washington Star.

APPLYING NEW BUSINESS METHODS.

"No," said the manager of one of the largest manufacturing and jobbing firms in the trade the other day, "we are not doing business the same way this year as we were a couple of years ago. Though our sales are as large and in some lines a good deal larger than they were then, they are not made in the same way. We have had to change our methods to meet the change in business conditions."

This is the experience of a great number of sales managers and travelers throughout the country. While business is recovering a healthy condition after the depression of the Winter and Spring this depressed period has caused a feeling of conservatism and caution which it is necessary to meet with new methods in order to keep the volume of business up to former years.

According to the gentleman mentioned above the situation is similar to that of a sick man. He needs a doctor. In a similar way business conditions need doctoring, not simply a mere application of healthy optimism, though that is quite helpful in its own way, but a change of treatment is necessary, as it were, to stir the jaded business system into new activity. As one sales manager puts it: "The trade must be given a new pill."

How this new treatment is administered varies widely with different houses. It is a time when a good deal of ingenuity has necessarily been called forth to meet the need, and in most cases the methods used are carefully hidden from the eye outside that particular house.

One of the steps taken, however, in almost every house, is to instil more so-called "ginger" into the members of the traveling staff. The travelers as they come in at the week end are not allowed to quote dull conditions as failure to get orders, but are built up as far as possible in the belief that business conditions are all right and are going to be so, and are sent out to instil this in turn into their customers.

Some houses are using special offers and little advantages in buying special lines of goods as an ingredient in the medicine, and if properly applied, this will also have a remedial effect. Other houses again, have methods of their own which they are not telling anybody of.

The effect of the medicine is being very carefully watched all over the country and while the late depression has not been of at all a welcome character it seems to have had at least one good effect in providing for the origination of new and improved methods of business-getting.

TAKE YOUR DISCOUNTS.

While much has been written on the subjects of discounts, it is a fact that many retail merchants do not fully appreciate the benefits which would accrue to them by taking advantage at all times of the cash discounts offered by manufacturers and jobbers for prompt payments. It is true that some retailers abuse the cash discount privilege, but as the Retailers' Journal says:

"That merchants should always take advantage of their discount privileges, and do so fairly, according to the rules, is one of the axioms of good business. By discounting his bills the retailer will save more money than he sometimes makes on selling the goods. For instance, on thirty day goods the merchant gets 1 per cent. off for cash in 10 days, which represent an annual rate of 18 per cent.; on 60 day goods he gets 2 per cent. for cash in 10 days, or 14.2 per cent. annual rates; and on 120 day goods he gets 4 per cent. for cash in 10 days, or 13.09 per cent. per annum, making the average of the three classes 15.09 per cent. per annum which he would save by discounting all bills. The actual percentage saved will be greater, because the retailer will probably buy more of the thirty and sixty day goods than of the four months' goods. It is therefore perfectly evident that it would pay the retail grocer to borrow money and pay seven per cent. at his bank rather than let his discounts go."

ADDING NEW EQUIPMENT.

A good many men in business to-day seem to forget that not only interest, but a profit above interest should be made on the investment each year, not only the investment in stock, but also in fixtures and equipment.

Every part of the business equipment deteriorates in value as it grows older, so a certain amount of its value should be cut off from the inventory each year, and this loss should also be considered when the earnings of the equipment are figured.

Many men in business never take the trouble to figure whether they are making or losing money on their equipment. They find they have a little more money at the close of the year than at the beginning, and do not bother to see where it comes from. They do not know whether the addition of a new piece of machinery or other equipment will make or lose them money; if it is a little handier, that is enough.

The right way to figure on the profits on any new equipment contemplated is to make the best possible estimate of its earning capacity, that is, how much it will increase business or cut down expenses, as a labor saving device which will save the hire of help may be a better investment than one which will increase the volume of business. After finding out about how much more it will make for the business, figure up how much it will cost to operate it, then interest on the investment and an allowance for wear and tear, the same as though you borrowed money to buy with, and deduct these figures from the earning capacity, and it is easy to see whether it will pay to add that particular kind of equipment.

ACTUAL CASH BASIS THE BEST.

We notice that a grocer of Thompsonville, Conn., has made a test of the short credit system, which means weekly payments. This proved unsatisfactory, and he has made the decision to adopt the actual cash system; this means a money transaction in every case and credit to nobody. We heartily endorse this dealer's decision, believing that the buying and selling of goods should be as nearly a cash business as possible. In fact, if "cash on the delivery of goods" were to be a motto, it would be an easier proposition to do business.

THE SITUATION IN THE WEST.

The Western Viewpoint, by our Special Correspondent.

Winnipeg, Oct. 20.—The West has had six weeks of crop movement under the most favorable auspices, and up to October 15th 17,353,350 bushels had passed inspection at Winnipeg, and of this 16,000,000 had reached the head of the lakes. This shows that more than one-sixth of the entire estimated wheat crop of the West for this season has passed inspection, a simply unprecedented movement. If the period of navigation remains open as late as it did last season there is every reason to believe that 50,000,000 bushels will be moved before navigation closes. Allowing 27,000,000 bushels for seed and feed and grinding by interior mills there will be roughly 75,000,000 bushels for export, and if two-thirds of this is moved before navigation closes this Fall it is surely all that even the farmers of the West ought to ask, and indeed it is questionable if from the standpoint of market prices it is at all wise to have so much moved. The percentage of the wheat shipped this year direct by the farmers is very much in excess of the same period in any other year. The percentage of contract wheat has been very high in the portion of the crop shipped, probably 80 per cent., and it is not an exaggerated estimate to say that the crop so far marketed has averaged the farmers at least 80c at their own station. It is not probable that the outturns of more than 15,000,000 bushels have as yet filtered back into the country, but even that amount would represent a return of some $12,000,000, which is, or will very shortly be, in circulation in the country.

The natural question is, "what effect is the crop movement having on trade?" and the answer from all sections of the wholesale trade is that it is good.

Since the beginning of October the flow of money from outside points to the city has been steadily increasing and though at the present time the volume is not at all so large as it will be before the end of the present month, at the same time it is of most encouraging proportions. In addition there is a correspondingly steady increase in the volume of new business being done. There has been no sudden increase and for that matter no startling increase, but there has been a steady gain day after day and week after week. To put it in the words of the head of one of the leading grocery houses in Winnipeg, "The cash receipts and the current business are both of the most encouraging character." The best feature about the whole trade is that even the exceptional crop movement has not caused any boom in business or any tendency to buy extravagantly, the country merchant seems to have learned his lesson from the depression of the past year most thoroughly and his buying is of the most judicious and satisfactory character. Not only is Fall trade satisfactory but the outlook for the trade of next Spring is better than it has been for years. This is the most noticeable in the dry goods trade, which is still a trade of seasons to a greater extent than the grocery business, which is now very much an all-the-year-round trade.

Flour trade is good also and millers report a growing export demand, especially for lower grade flours, though the trade in all grades is good.

Produce trade is good at this season and now it is possible to size up the situation fairly for the Winter. In butter the make of the season has been comparatively light in proportion to the demand and it is doubtful if the stocks in store for the Winter have been so light for many years, and the indications are that high prices will rule all Winter. The retail price of butter has been 35c to 36c per pound for some weeks now, and 40c and even higher is predicted for later in the season. Creameries should certainly have paid this season if they never did before. The make of cheese has also been light, but of excellent quality. Large orders have been placed for eastern cheese and considerable quantities are already in stock. Eggs are also scarce and dear and likely to get more so as the season advances. Throughout the entire season of 1908 the egg supply has never been equal to the demand.

The cattle market continues steady with heavy receipts and few changes in price. Dealers report a more liberal supply of cars since the closing of the strike and the movement has been more rapid. Sales at the Winnipeg yards for the week ending October 10th were the heaviest for a long time.

The demand for hogs is steady, but owing to the Chicago market there has been an easing up in prices and 6½ is quoted as against 7 to 7⅛ ten days ago.

Sheep will be fed in quantities at Port Arthur again this season and already bunches of sheep for this purpose are being accumulated in the West. Men who intend feeding steers in the open are also getting busy and gathering their herds together for the Winter. Fall ploughing is being pushed vigorously and although up to the present time there has been practically no cold weather, there is a general air of getting ready for Winter.

The high pressure plant has at last been tested and found satisfactory and the city engineer has recommended the city taking it over without delay. In the meantime the underwriters have notified their clients that the rates of insurance will be lowered in accordance with the arrangement to that effect that was to come in force when a high pressure system was installed.

The finishing of the St. Andrew's locks, which will be open for use next year, has revived the matter of the valuable pulp wood on Lake Winnipeg, and at a recent meeting in Minneapolis of those interested in pulp wood much attention was given to reports on the quantity and quality of these woods. The experts reported a "practically inexhaustible supply." The reserve in Western Ontario also came in for consideration.

The development of pulpwood industries at Fort William and Winnipeg can only be a question of time, and at present it looks as if the time would be short.

Another local industry that is making progress is that of the making of peat. The burning of the mill last year so soon after construction was a hard blow to the company, but the newer and larger plant is now in operation and the product will be on the Winnipeg market this Fall in considerable quantities.—H.

PAYS TO LEARN DETAILS.

The young man who hopes to have charge of a business of his own, or for someone else in a few years, should never lose sight of the fact that it pays well to learn every detail of the business. Every day some little thing comes up which, though a mere incident and possibly easily passed over without digging down to the bottom of it, should be treated differently by the young man who would make a success of life.

Such a man should never allow these little details to pass him without making himself thoroughly familiar with them, for they are business lessons, and the more of them he absorbs while working for another the fewer of them will be stumbling blocks when it comes time to manage the business himself. For at that time, if he has had the experience, he can give a word or two of instructions and be sure things will be carried out right, and those in his employ will have the more confidence in him, while the opposite effect will be created if he is compelled to admit that he knows nothing about it, and depends upon someone else to dig out the particulars, and the effect is even worse if he gives instructions which prove that he is not acquainted with the subject in hand. Get every detail. It belongs with the business.

BRITISH GOODS ON CANADIAN MARKETS

How the Business of English Houses Might be Stimulated in This Country—More Attractive Packages and Freer Use of Advertising Will Do the Work.

Nowadays we are constantly hearing of methods and means of increasing the good feeling between the various colonies of the British Empire and the Mother Country. Sentiment and emotion will have to be followed up by something more tangible and enduring. Sentiment may be sauce, but good business relations will be the pudding. Some people who are visionary may deny this, and imagine it is not so, but that does not alter the hard facts of the case just the same, disagreeable as they may be.

While politicians are making long-winded speeches about these matters there are a few things which the manufacturers can do themselves on both sides of the Atlantic to bring about more intimate relationships. In this article we are only in a position to point out the defects in British goods, and how they affect their sale in the Canadian market. It remains for someone on the other side of the ocean to bring our shortcomings before our notice, and by this means both countries will be in a position to institute reforms without a further loss of time.

Pointing Out Defects.

Coming in contact with the selling agents of British firms here these defects which their houses seem slow to remedy are pointed out. Although the Canadian people's ideals are British in government and phases of life of a similar nature, no one can deny that the average person in Canada if he or she be native born, resembles the Stateser more closely than the British, which is only natural, living so close to them and only divided from them by an imaginary line. This is more particularly so with reference to habits of living and dress. Our monetary system is almost precisely the same, which is undoubtedly a factor in bringing the United States and Canada closer together commercially.

Use the Metric System.

Perhaps right here, it will be well to start pointing out means by which the British producer can help, to a large extent the sale of his goods in Canada. Let their bills and commercial data be printed with our currency as we are unfamiliar with pounds, shillings and pence. This will help considerably, as it will show the Canadian that the British manufacturer is beginning to take an interest in Canada, and make their goods to please Canadians, even if they are not suitable for the English market.

British Quality Unquestioned.

There is one point about which we can find no fault, and which redounds to the credit of the British people, and that is quality. There is no misrepresentation about their goods, and they are always as good as they say they are. One great American said of the United States people that they liked to be humbugged, and perhaps this may be said, in a small way to be the case with the Canadian people.

Attractive Packages a Factor.

Here more package and less goods are required. By this it is meant to convey the idea, that attractive packages go a long way toward satisfactory sales returns. Bulk goods are becoming less fashionable every day. People must have their goods in neat packages, and most of them don't mind paying handsomely for the privilege. as may be shown by the following instance which illustrates an actual case in point. Some English confectionery which was of a superior quality was placed beside a line of the same kind from the United States. The English product sold here for ten cents an ounce, the United States' sold for ten cents a package, and when they were compared in weight, it was found that the consumer would get almost twice as much if he bought the English bulk goods. This left almost five cents to the United States dealer to pay for his bottle, supposing the initial cost of the contents was the same in both countries. At the outside figure, however, the bottle and label could not have cost more than one cent, therefore this left the American with four cents advantage over his British competitor, and all because he was quick to appreciate the wants and requirements of the Canadian trade. This is one example, there are many more exactly the same.

Specializing Needed.

There is a greater need of specializing also for the Canadian market. Something new or at least with a new name is what is wanted. Those who handle English goods complain that the English manufacturers think what is salable there should be so here, but this is not the case and their success in the future depends in a large measure on the recognition of the special requirements for this market.

Must Be Liberal With Advertising.

There is another consideration of vital importance which hampers the sale of English goods in this market, and that is the insufficiency of advertising grants. It is impossible for representatives to compete with United States products which are given unlimited publicity through advertising campaigns. Many agents for English goods find themselves hampered for want of advertising matter and adequate appropriations to enter the field with their competitors, who are on the spot.

A Visit Will Help.

It has been suggested by the representative of one of the largest firms in England, that it would be to their advantage whenever an English firm contemplated entering the Canadian market with a product, one of the heads of the firm should come over here and remain long enough to familiarize himself with Canadian conditions, and then with the advantage of a reputation for the highest value in goods their chances of success would be beyond doubt.

Some of the Swiss firms have recognized the value of advertising largely and are meeting with wonderful success.

A Summing Up.

To recapitulate then it is obvious that the following features should be introduced more freely into English goods.

1. A more free use of our currency on labels and literature.

2. More specializing in products and names.

3. Packing in attractive packages and bottles with neat labels.

4. More generous appropriations for advertising.

If the British manufacturers follow out these suggestions, which have been gathered from gentlemen engaged in selling their products, they will find that the Canadian people will give the preference to the English goods in every case. In this way the bond of union will be drawn more closely and a more intimate commercial relationship will result.

THE "PULL TOGETHER" SPIRIT.

It is this "pull together" spirit that is building up the small towns all over the country; and anything that builds up a town builds up every merchant in that town.

It is the "pull together" spirit that is bringing more trade to these small towns, that is bringing people from longer distances, and that is virtually killing mail order competition. And when these things are accomplished, while no one merchant can expect to derive all the benefit, yet every live and aggressive dealer in the town is bound to get his share.

Yes, let this grand, good, brotherly "pull together" work go on among merchants. And instead of the merchants of a town going on the "warpath" with each other, and bending their energy toward downing the other fellow, with the result that legitimate living profits to all concerned are sacrificed, give up trying to kill your neighbors and all work harmoniously together for the general good of the town, and see if you can not extend the limit of your territory just a little farther out so that you will all receive a substantial increase of trade.—Southern Merchant.

"Can you walk on your hands or turn a somersault or a cartwheel, Miss Edith?" asked Johnny, of his new nurse.

"No, dear," answered the young woman with a sweet smile. "Why do you ask me? I can't do anything like that."

"Well," said Johnny, with a sigh, "I'm afraid you won't do. They told me you were a trained nurse!"

QUEBEC MARKETS

Montreal, October 21, 1908.

Sugar—Steady.
Rolled Oats—Weaker.
Vegetables—Steady.
Fruit—Advanced.
Cheese—Declined.
Eggs—Advanced.

Trade in grocery lines generally has been quiet during the week. Some of the large wholesale houses are finding it necessary to retrench in view of a none too prosperous winter. Eggs have advanced. Flour has not declined as was expected by many would happen as soon as the wheat crop of the West got into operation. Many buyers have now seen the fallacy of this conjecture, and are now placing their orders. There has been a weaker feeling in the rolled oats market, but this has not yet affected the market to any extent as regards price. Some of the smaller firms have been offering more favorable prices.

Fruits and vegetables are firm. Export demand for butter has fallen off completely. Cheese is dull and featureless. Honey is passably fair, that is all that can be said for it. Beans are in good demand, but there are few new ones on the market. Maple products display nothing new. Most other lines present no new features this week. Collections are said to be only fair.

SUGAR—The drop in sugar has not apparently exercised any stimulating effect upon the market as sales have not increased to an appreciative extent. It is thought, however, that the holiday season, which is approaching, will brighten up prospects to some extent. Owing to the firmer condition of the market in Europe the American market will soon follow suit. In fact, the feeling is already slightly stronger in New York.

MOLASSES AND SYRUPS — The market for molasses is fairly active only. Dealers, however, expect the approach of the holiday season will stimulate trade in this line, also the cooler weather. Syrups are also only passably active. The small tin varieties are more in demand than other varieties. Prices are unchanged.

COFFEES—The cooler weather has given some additional impetus to the market which gives it an exceptionally healthy aspect. Reports from Brazil state that the increasing production of coffee throughout the world, especially in Brazil, is illustrated in the returns for the crop of 1907-8, recently closed, and with entries during the first two months (July and August) of the current crop year. The total entries of coffee in Brazil last year was 11,349,271 bags, substantially the same as the average entries for the four years previous to the banner year of 1906-7. The total shipments were 12,953,572, as compared with the average shipments of 12,782,723 for the past eight crop years. The visible supply on June 30, 1908,—14,567.285 bags—was only about 2,000,000 bags less than a year ago at the wind-up of the immense crop of that season. Most significant, perhaps, of all is the fact that the entries of coffee at Rio de Jainero and Santos during July and August, 1908, are almost as large as during the great crop of 1906-7, and at Bahia and Victoria, larger. While the prospect of additional tax in Sao Paulo renders the situation somewhat abnormal, there is no doubt but that present indications are for a very large crop during the current season.

TEA—Japan market is now practically cleared of teas, and what small quantities are left are changing hands at some advance on prices of a week or ten days ago. The local market is still displaying a marked absence of transactions in large volume, but fairly numerous transactions in small quantities for immediate use are reported. The black market is exceedingly dull. "Some weeks ago," state London advices, "the tendency of the tea market was upward. The quality generally speaking was then good, and the demand active, consequently the earlier public sales of September showed considerable strength, and confidence on the part of buyers, which importers were not slow to notice, with the result that for a couple of weeks the teas arriving were very freely offered. Buyers consequently became more discriminating in their attitude, and as the quality just then showed some little falling off, there was less inclination to bid, and prices lost the advance they had previously made, thus bringing common grades of every description at the end of September to about the same point as at the end of August. As regards finer sorts, Darjeeling and Assam growths also became less desirable in cup, and prices declined in proportion. Advices from our houses in Calcutta and Colombo report production a little ahead in the former, and rather behind in the latter, but seeing that only about one-third of the Indian tea crop has yet been shipped, it is much too early to predict the year's total crop. Probably for the next month or two the quantity of Indian and Ceylon tea arriving in London may be nearly the same as it was a year ago, but so much tea is now shipped on optional bills of lading that it is impossible to arrive at absolute accuracy."

DRIED FRUITS — The steamer Bellona, of the Thomson line, arrived last Tuesday, being the first boat to arrive from the primary markets. Her cargo was made up as follows: From Patras, 1,225 quarter cases currants, 3,191 quarter boxes raisins, 79,068 boxes raisins; from Denia, 46,225 half boxes raisins, 3,191 quarter boxes raisins, 79,068 boxes of raisins; from Malaga, 6,204 boxes raisins, 4,942 quarter boxes of raisins, 700 cartons raisins. Valencia raisins are quiet. Currants are more active on the spot. The market is steady and prices are unchanged. New dates are expected in New York by Tabristan, October 22. A dealer in speaking of the trade in dates made some remarks on their value as a food. They are on this account becoming yearly better recognized as a nutritious food product.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL—Canned vegetables are in fairly good demand. Fruits are sorely neglected. Meats are only in fair demand. The prospects are good for good prices in salmon as the pack is very fair.

TORONTO—Considerable interest has been shown the past week and dealers are said to be buying fairly freely of both fruits and vegetables.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

Toronto, October 22, 1908.

POINTERS—

Sugar—Steady.
Flour—Advanced.
Oatmeal—Declined.
Collections—Fair.

Wholesale business seems to be a little quieter this week. Whatever the cause is cannot be ascertained unless the elections are having a quieting effect on business. In Toronto business circles nothing much is talked of but the Guild case now before the courts in which several wholesalers figure and many conjectures are made as to the outcome. The only market changes of note during the week were in lines of flour and cereal. As is noted at length in a department on a later page, flour advanced 10 cents and oatmeal declined 15 cents during the week. Lines of staple groceries have remained pretty generally steady.

SUGAR—While prices of refined show no change the raw situation, as hinted in last issue, is much stronger. European beet markets, chiefly owing to the prevalence of unfavorable weather, have advanced fully 3d during the week. This was reflected in an advance on refined in New York on Tuesday. As yet there seems no probability of any early change in Canadian refined as demand at the present time is very light. With the advancing raw markets, however, a change is possible. Willett & Gray, commenting on the situation, say, in part: "Much, however, will depend upon the course of the European markets from now forward. The whole sugar situation is very favorable for a large consumption and permanent values for some time to come. It will be noted from reports from France, Germany and Austria, that rains are badly wanted to increase the weight of the beet roots and to facilitate the pulling of the roots for use." Local prices are:

TEA—Some business is being done locally in lower grades. Fine teas are scarce and high in price. The foreign markets have shown no noticeable change during the week.

COFFEE—Business continues fairly good with no change in prices. Willett & Gray, in commenting on the general situation, say:

"From reports cabled from Brazil it is learned that after a moderate flowering in August there was a good flowering in September, but in consequence of the continued drought the blossoms fell off to a large extent. As it is now the middle of October it is quite noticeable that crop accounts are so scarce. In former years crop cables appeared early in the season accompanied by figures, and in October they were usually very abundant. But the fact is that exporters in Brazil have always been more diligent in sending out crop reports when they could do so to suit their own ideas. The great majority of them being interested to see lower prices, crop reports would not be sent out by them unless of a tenor to suit their side of the market. The markets are somewhat lower than a week ago, and reports have been spread about the San Paulo loan. But in the nature of things the facts about the progress of the negotiations are not available to the publications that print the stories. There can be no doubt that the Balkan troubles have contributed towards retarding the final conclusion of this business. The buying of coffee continues as before, the trade in the interior being unwilling to buy more than their wants from day to day. As the strike in Santos is ended, the collection of the increased surtax of 5 francs per bag will commence on the 17th inst. There is a very large quantity of coffee to be shipped for Europe and the States, and naturally there is very great pressure to get it away from Santos to escape the new tax, and very heavy shipments will be completed with the close of the week."

DRIED FRUITS—Though prices remain unchanged there is an easier feeling evident, both in the local market and in California and foreign markets. The effect of this will probably be felt some little time later. The amount of business passing is very fair, though buying continues to be in small lots.

REMEMBERED BY TRAVELER FRIENDS.

A pleasing event, in which a number of grocery travelers were interested, took place on Saturday morning, Oct. 17, when F. R. Morgan, of the Morgan Supply Co., 1048 Queen St. east, Toronto, was presented with a handsome morris chair to celebrate the travelers' congratulations on the occasion of his recent marriage. The presentation was made by W. Bremner, of the Davidson & Hay Co. and the following travelers also had a share in the occasion: A. Hutchison, John Taylor & Co.; J. Stokes, John Sloan & Co.; Thos. HEINZ FACTORY IN LEAMINGTON.

Pittsburg Firm Will Establish Branch in Western Ontario.

A report from Leamington this week says that the Heinz Pickle Co., of Pittsburg, has at last decided to locate a branch factory in that town. Officers of the company having been looking over Western Ontario for some time to find a suitable site and Leamington has at last been decided on. The town has agreed to purchase the premises of a local tobacco factory to put in a sewer and to exempt the property for twenty years. A by-law to this effect will be put before the electors on Nov. 6.

IT PUZZLED HIM.

A tanner was anxious to fix a suitable sign to his premises. Finally a happy thought struck him.

He bored a hole through the doorpost and stuck a calf's tail into it with the tufted end outside.

After a while he saw a solemn-faced man standing near the door looking at the sign. The tanner watched him a minute and then stepped out and addressed him.

"Good morning, sir," he said.

"Good morning," said the other, without taking his eyes off the sign.

"Do you want to buy leather?" asked the tanner.

"No."

"Perhaps you've got some hides to sell?"

"No."

"Are you a farmer?"

"No."

"What are you, then?"

"I am a philosopher. I've been standing here for nearly an hour trying to find out how that calf got through that hole."

PERSONAL NOTES.

Albert A. Stichbury, a manufacturers' agent, of Wellington, New Zealand, was in Toronto this week calling on members of the trade, and will later visit other cities in Ontario and also Winnipeg and Vancouver. Mr. Stichbury has the agency in New Zealand for several of the best English houses and he is looking over Canada with a view to securing similar agencies here and incidentally with increasing Canadian-New Zealand trade.

The Production of Sardines

AN INTERESTING AND VALUABLE INDUSTRY—HOW THE WORK IS DONE IN THE FRENCH PORTS.

The production and canning of sardines is one of the most interesting industries connected with the grocery and fishing business.

Sardines are universally conceded to be one of the healthiest of foods, and certainly few kinds of foods are more palatable.

The principal varieties of sardines are French, Portuguese, Norwegian and domestic. There is quite a variance in sardines. The fish is named after the Island of Sardinia, about whose shores millions of the fish are caught annually. the same principle as smoked meats and other smoked fish are prepared.

Strictly speaking, the American sardine, taken off the eastern Atlantic coast, is a herring, and not a sardine. It is a distinctly different type of fish, as all dealers in French sardines know. Small quantities of a fish, closely resembling the French sardine, have been found in the waters of the Pacific coast off California, but owing to the small quantity and the irregularity of securing them, attempts to can them for the market have never been successful. They

The Portuguese put up a sardine which is a great deal like the French sardine, save that it does not possess the same flavor. A great many Portuguese sardines have been shipped into France, the labels changed and the goods put on the market as French sardines.

The so-called Norwegian sardines are a somewhat different type of fish. They have become very popular of late, especially the smoked kind, which are not only pleasant in flavor, but very cheap in price. These sardines are prepared with what is known as liquid smoke on possess a flavor which is desirable, but cannot be found in marketable quantities. The flavor is almost identical with the French fish.

A Leading Industry in France.

The production of sardines is the leading fishery industry of France, employing nearly 10,000 vessels of various sizes and over 30,000 fishermen. The fish is found about nine months of the year, the season opening in the spring and lasting until the first severe storm in November or December. They are at their fattest and best condition for canning during the middle of the season. Like many other small fish, they go in schools and swim near the surface, In extra fine seasons as many as 100,000 fish have been taken in one net from one school, but this is remarkable, the usual catch being from a few hundred to a few thousand. They live on fish smaller than themselves and are preyed upon by mackerel, haddock and other larger fish. The extremely small catch of the last few years is accounted for by the fact that the sardines have been eaten up by larger fish.

Government Protection.

The French Government has taken a hand in protecting sardines, using explosives to rid certain waters of the larger fish just before the opening of the season. This work has been in the nature of an experiment, but it is now regarded as successful. The quantity of sardines taken in June of last year is reported to have been larger than for some years.

Twelve Years' Production.

The following table, which has been carefully compiled from French Government statistics, shows the production for the past twelve years. It will be seen that the catch for the last five years has been only about 20 to 25 per cent. of the normal quantity :

Year.	Pounds.
1895	29,492,502
1896	69,871,102
1897	98,298,504
1898	111,998,794
1899	62,657,465
1900	81,615,776
1901	85,721,924
1902	18,352,173
1903	20,777,612
1904	27,511,320
1905	20,461,000
1906	19,811,675

The Brittany coast, to the northwest of France, is the centre of the industry. The cities and towns there have not been as prosperous as formerly, many of the fishermen and their families having moved away on account of the scarcity of the fish.

The towns of Concarneau, Dournenez and Nantes are the important sardine packing centres of France, using millions of the fish.

How They Are Caught.

For catching, great gill nets dyed a greenish blue so that they will, as near as possible, resemble the color of the water, and thus not be seen by the fish, are used. The bait, which is called "rogue," is prepared from the salted roe of the cod and other fish and drawn along the surface of the water by the men in charge of the boats, the purpose being to attract the fish in such a way that they will find their way into the nets. Throwing the bait into the water in such a way as to attract the fish is a matter of some skill, it being claimed that some men can do it in such a way that the net can be filled when drawn, while with others the fish get away, the bait not having been thrown in just the right spot for them to fall into the net.

The high price and scarcity of bait is sometimes a great drawback. Nearly all of it has to be imported from Norway, although some of it comes from the United States and from Canada. The price of bait has at times been as high at $18 a barrel, and in ordinary seasons the price of bait alone represents an expenditure of nearly $300,000. The mesh of the nets is very small, naturally. The fishermen use peanut meal or flour to mix with the roe, it being cheaper, floating lightly and attracting the attention of the sardines. The largest fish are caught four or five miles from the shore, while the smaller ones come further in.

The fishermen start out very early in the morning and by the middle of the forenoon the wharves, which have been deserted, are very busy places, some of the fishermen having already arrived with their catches. The fish on being unloaded are carried to canneries, much of this work being done by women and girls in short skirts, wearing white caps.

Wooden shoes are largely worn by the fishermen and their families and they make a great deal of noise on the stone pavements. The larger factories employ both men and women as buyers, these buyers coming to the wharves and bargaining for the fish as soon as they arrive, and often within a few minutes of the time when the fish arrive at the wharves they are taken to the canneries where they are immediately cleaned, assorted as to size, put for a short time into a strong brine and then washed.

Drying the Fish.

The next process is drying, the drying being done outdoors on racks built for the purpose. When thoroughly dried by the sun they are cooked in oil for a few minutes. When the tail fin breaks easily the cooking is considered done and the fish are ready to be packed in tin. In preparing the best grades the best of olive oil is used, while in the cheaper grades, peanut oil and cottonseed oil are used, in some instances being mixed with olive oil. The flavor of the sardine depends very much on the oil in which it is cooked and packed. As the oil costs very much more than the fish, the fish are crowded as closely as possible into the tins. Cheaper fish are sometimes packed in the same oil in which they are cooked.

Sardines Improve With Age.

Nearly all sardines improve with age and are at their best at from four to six years after being packed. In some of the canneries where the very best packing is done, the fish never leave the factory for the market until they have been canned at least one year, during which time the tins are turned over once a month with great regularity, so that the oil will thoroughly permeate the fish, thus improving the flavor. The better grades of sardines usually contain, in addition to the oil in the fish, a bit of bay leaf or a clove or two or both, and it takes quite a while for the flavor of these ingredients to permeate the flesh of the fish. In time, however, they improve the flavor.

In wet weather the sardines are dried indoors by artificial heat, but the outdoor drying is preferred. The drying process usually takes about an hour, most of the fish caught in the forenoon being canned in the afternoon. A large part of the work in connection with the canning of sardines is done by women and girls and some of the larger factories are able to pack over a quarter of a million fish per day. Of late years, however, the trouble has been to get the fish.

Will Keep Indefinitely.

Fish packed in a good quality of oil will keep in good condition for an almost indefinite length of time, but they are hardly fit to eat until they are seven or eight months old. The best quality of French sardines have a flavor which is impossible to imitate. Probably the Portuguese product is the closest to the French.

Window in Store of Harry Hope, Toronto, which Won Second Prize in the Recent Lipton Window-dressing Competition.

As a general thing, the brand which has been first introduced in a given section holds the larger part of the trade. This condition has even led to the notion on the part of some grocers that such a brand, the original one in that particular section, is the only real genuine sardine, others being a similar fish, an imitation, as it were. The better informed grocers, of course, know this is not so, while the lover of sardines can tell a sardine from any other fish the moment he tastes it.—Pacific Fisherman.

Our Travelers' Page

THE STORY OF ONE SALESMAN'S SUCCESS—HELPFUL SUGGESTIONS FOR THE CRAFT.

It is not every commercial traveler who can point to a record of twenty-three years' continuous service with one firm, but Alfred H. Hodge, with Chase & Sanborn, the coffee importers, Montreal, whose likeness appears on this page, is one of the few.

Mr. Hodge is not by any means an old man, so it will be seen that practically all his commercial life has been spent with the one house, and it has Born at St. Laurent, a suburb of Montreal, in 1865, he received his education in the college of his native town, and at 19 entered the employ of the Canadian Pacific Railway. This work did not suit him, for, born on a farm, and spending his boyhood thereon, he could not do his best work in the confines of an office. After twelve months he made application to Chase & Sanborn, then but a year established in Canada, for employment as a city traveler. He was taken on, inexperienced though he was and given a trial, for the management liked his style and thought there was the making of a good salesman in him. They were not disappointed. Young Hodge took a vise-like hold on the grip which he has never released. He possessed one great advantage which has always been of great service to him and that was the ability to speak French fluently.

At that time J. J. Speirs was covering Montreal for Chase & Sanborn, but when it was seen that the new man was making good Mr. Spiers was sent to Toronto, to act as the company's representative in the West, which position he still holds. Mr. Hodge was made city traveler for the firm then, and made a wonderful success of his work At the time Chase & Sanborn were doing but a small business in the city but through the efforts of the new traveler, backed by the goods and an efficient office organization, this was magnificently increased, until to-day they do really an immense trade. Later on Mr. Hodge was given wider territory to cover, calling at Three Rivers and intervening towns, and going as far west as Kingston. He was just as successful in this larger field. Later on he was given to Montreal, Ottawa and Quebec, and he still looks after these cities.

Inexperienced when he entered the employ of the coffee house, Mr. Hodge is now numbered among the commercial travelers comprising the old brigade and he has a wide and strong connection, besides a knowledge of coffee, such as is possessed by few knights of the grip.

Of a quiet, pleasing disposition he has made hundreds of friends among the grocers of the country, who always have a welcome for him, greeting him with "Hello, Alf., old boy," and receiving in return just as intimate a salutation from the man who sells "Seal Brand."

A. T. HODGE.

A GOOD SUGGESTION.

Here is a good suggestion for a wholesale grocer's salesman:

Make a note each day (on a convenient tab that can be easily referred to) of all the profitable articles that you desire to sell that day, and never let a single opportunity pass of suggesting these articles to your customer. It is a fine habit to cultivate.

Wonderful is the power of suggestion—acting on a good suggestion and making others act.

Suggesting and selling the goods that boosts the average profit of your buyer and employer. The doing what we should each day instead of doing only what we must, remembering always that our value, like charity, begins at home, and that our value consists in our useful service each day to all concerned in our transactions, always leaving your customer so that both will realize the meeting has been profitable.

The wholesale and retail grocers have to sell so many articles that don't pay, that they must keep constantly in mind the articles that do pay in order to succeed. It is for the wholesale salesman to suggest these articles to the retailer, so that the retailer will suggest them to his customers by proper display, etc.

TRIBUTE TO TRAVELING MEN.

Every young man, in preparing for a business career, should spend two or three years on the road, as a traveling salesman. Some of the most successful men in business to-day began as traveling men. We never see a traveling salesman that we do not admire his easy grace, his politeness, and his familiarity with men and conditions.

Traveling men are nearly always well informed; nearly all of them acquire an education from traveling around, and rubbing up against strange men. And an education of this kind is better than a college education, for practical purposes.

Many years ago a joke book was issued, purporting to contain the "jokes" told by traveling salesmen. Traveling salesmen are not given to telling "jokes." They are serious, and well behaved. The notion that they are noted cut-ups originated with the joke book issued many years ago, and which is still offered at railway newsstands. Traveling men are nearly all married, and we have noted that they are nearly all good husbands. In nine cases out often, when a traveling man goes on a vacation trip, he takes his wife with him. Take a long ride in a Pullman, and lounge about the smoking room, and you will note that the cleverest men you meet are commercial travelers. Therefore, if you want to give your son an excellent business training, get him a job as a traveling salesman. He will acquire steadiness, common sense, business ability and integrity for a commercial traveler soon learns the importance of giving everybody a square deal.—Atchison (Kansas) Globe.

SOME "SPECIALS."

"The better the salesman, the more nearly he represents and executes the will of his employer and the more powerfully does his personal force dominate the thoughts of his customers as a result."

One salesman should never intrude upon another who is in conversation with a buyer. He might interrupt at a critical moment. Many orders have been lost through lack of this common courtesy and consideration as between salesmen.

What was known as the "clean bed" bill, fathered by the Mississippi Travelers' Association, has been passed and has become a law in that State. The bill makes it an offense to assign a room to an incoming guest in which the bed linens have not been changed. The bill also provides for the general sanitary regulation of hotels.

"Blame yourself when you fail, and you will succeed. Blame some one else, and you will remain a failure."—Sheldon.

"The biggest item in the expense account," says a salesman, "is the forgetfulness of buyers."

THE FIDGETY BUYER.

I've been on the road for many a day,
And bumped into all sorts of buyers,
The big-hearted fellow, who'll buy and look gay,
The one who will never turn any away,
The grumpy old rooster, who's there with his "nay,"
And the large bunch of good-natured liars.

I'll stand for the fellow who'll argue his case,
And show me I'm not the whole circus.
I'll "shake" with the one who thinks it no disgrace
To lie 'till he's really black in the face.
I'll pardon the one with the rebating pace,
And the one whose sole aim is to "work" us.

I'll eat with the merchant who runs the hotel,
I'll comment on his wife's knack of cooking (?),
I'll fondle his youngsters (and big ones as well),
That is, in the case where the big ones won't tell,
Where the "big one's" a girl, the acknowledged town belle,
And she strikes me as extra good looking.

I'll stand for the fellow with no word to say,
While I talk wares, prices and profit,
Who, when I am through, will jump into the fray,
And figure the "net" in a different way,
Then whisper ironically, "Nothing to-day,"
In other words, "You go to ———— Tophet."

But if there's one man on this globular sphere
Who makes me feel real pugilistic,
'Tis he, when, a salesman is drawing quite near Who'll "hike" up the stairway or break for the rear,
And just as the train comes you'll see him appear,
Then bid you "Good-bye" so artistic.

I never wish anyone luck the wrong way,
But as this fellow's manner's depressing,
I hope when he 'pears on the great judgment day
At the grand pearly gates, the angel will say,
"I haven't the keys, and St. Peter's away,"
I guess this would set him to guessing.
—Ignatius Brennan, in the Sample Case.

TO DEVELOP WESTERN PACKING BUSINESS.

The committee recently formed to promote the establishment of an export trade in chilled meat, and develop the packing-house business in Western Canada and other parts of the Dominion, met at Lacombe, Alta., recently. Frank Whiteside, President of the Central Alberta Stock Growers' Association, was in the chair, and W. F. Stevens, Live Stock Commissioner for the Province of Alberta, also attended the meeting. Since its formation on July 4 this committee has investigated the chilled meat trade and packing-house business, and a large number of letters have been received from people who are in favor of the movement. The writers touch upon the necessity of providing a better market for cattle and hogs if mixed farming is to be encouraged. In several cases influential firms in Great Britain have written, pointing out that a good market exists in that country for large quantities of chilled beef.

The question of supplementing the meat supply of the United Kingdom is being considered by many people in that country. Not only is the need felt of keeping pace with their ever-increasing requirements in that respect, but the question of finding some means of counteracting any antagonistic move on the part of the American Meat Trust is exercising the minds of the legislators. There is no doubt that a scheme for stimulating the dead meat export trade from Canada would be favorably received in the Old Country.

R. H. Rew, Assistant Secretary to the Board of Agriculture of Great Britain, says:—"It seems highly probable that the dead meat trade will continue in the future to increase year by year, with the ever-growing requirements of our population, while the oversea transit of live animals may be expected to diminish and eventually to disappear, as a relic of an age of imperfect economic development."

WHAT DRUGS CAN A GROCER SELL?

An Ontario country merchant, under a recent date, writes to the editor of The Grocer as follows: "I was fined to-day for selling quinine, though was totally in ignorance of it being contrary to law, and I naturally suppose the bulk of country merchants are in the same fix as myself—don't know any better. Will you kindly answer the followings questions in your next issue?

(1) "Is it lawful for a country merchant to sell quinine?

(2) "What drugs and medicines can he sell without conflicting with the Pharmacy Act?"

In answer to these questions we have pleasure in giving the following information: It is not lawful for any person but a qualified chemist to sell quinine. Section 26 of the Pharmacy Act fully answers the second question. It reads: "No person shall sell or keep open shop for retailing, dispensing or compounding poisons, drugs or medicines except patent or proprietary medicines, together with turpentine, epsom salts, senna, alum, borax, castor oil, sulphur, Glauber's salt, cream of tartar, carbonate of soda, bi-carbonate of soda and glycerine."

The information may be of considerable interest to others than our correspondent.

CHAPTER XIX., Continued.

The Wholesaler's Position.

With a cash payment of five hundred dollars a dealer obtains a thousand dollars' worth of goods from his wholesaler, and returns home without funds for his current expenses. With the credit thus obtained he secures from his bank a few hundred dollars, for which he gives his note secured by goods in his store as collateral. The wholesaler takes no note, is not secured in any way. Credit is extended on confidence. That is a thing the salesman should know and impress upon his trade when occasion demands: Confidence is the common law of barter and selling with the wholesaler. Confidence has built up the great credit system that rules the commercial world. Confidence makes it possible for the merchant with small capital to do business and prosper if he is honest and hard-working. Therefore, his obligation with his dealer should be safeguarded as religiously as his obligation with his banker. But too often this is not the case. The note at the bank is promptly met because of a wholesome fear of banking methods. If there is not enough to go around when pay-day arrives, the wholesaler is put off with excuses and a plea for an extension.

Customers are not always grateful for financial favors. They seem to forget easily, and are often touchy on the subject. After a long up-hill run, during which they are assisted again and again, finally coming out in the clearing, with a little surplus in the bank and the last payment made, they draw a self-satisfied breath and say, "There now, I've got you paid up. I can do as I please."

It's a great thing to be free from the bondage of debt, and a greater thing to remember with gratitude the helping hand that made deliverance possible. It is the salesman's duty deftly but firmly to persuade customers like this to appreciate and recognize their obligation.

An Experience With One Customer.

I remember a customer who had been "carried over" from year to year by the house that gave me my start on the road. The firm went out of its way on many an occasion to help him to make good when no other house in the country would trust him for a dollar. He was always treated right, receiving all the advantages that the best customer on the books enjoyed. His business finally grew to a point where he was obliged to have more goods than his line of credit with us would permit. Realizing that his need was urgent if his creditors' demands were to be met, I volunteered to set him right with a traveling acquaintance from a neighboring house. The other traveler accepted my statement of his condition, and on his first visit sold him quite a large bill. He kept increasing his purchases with the new house and likewise his payments, neglecting our house on both, naturally feeling that the new house should be paid promptly. As our payments grew smaller, he concluded that he would better place the burden of his business where his remittances were sent. His business continued to grow, and by the time he had wormed himself free from our debt his purchasing power had increased one hundred per cent. Far-away houses began to scent his prosperity, which tickled his vanity. Gradually he slipped farther and farther away from the house that had faithfully stood by him for so many years when he was getting a start.

One day a dispute arose over a price; his purchases had dwindled down to practically nothing; he began to abuse my firm. The ire in my soul was now thoroughly aroused, and I told him in unvarnished terms what I thought of his whole conduct toward us. He got sulky, but was too much ashamed to resent the flaying he received; besides, he knew every word of it was true.

I let him sulk for six months, then called again, greeting him as though nothing had happened. He seemed glad to see me. Cordially extending his hand he said, "Don't say a word. It's all right. I deserved what I got, and now I'm ready to stick to the old firm." And he kept his word, becoming one of our strongest accounts.

CHAPTER XX.

The Salesman's Relation to the Buyer.

Every salesman who has overcome the obstacles that beset his path, and made good, realizes the weight of responsibility that is attached to the daily routine of his work. Heavy as the load appears to be at times, it is as nothing when compared to the thorny road every buyer is obliged to travel in his efforts at selecting only the best sellers the marts of the world afford.

How to pick the winners is as much of a problem to most buyers as the operation of a shell game is to the average public. If the buyer's foresight were as good as his hindsight, all buyers would soon be trying to dodge the proposed tax on swollen fortunes.

It is a great deal easier to criticize than to help. The buyers of your house can get along without your criticism, but they must have your help. Two or three disgruntled salesmen in the line-up can turn enough others against a line of merchandise to swamp the best buyer on earth in less time than it takes to write it. The salesmen of a house can make or break a buyer at will. nearly all salesmen live in glass houses when it comes to puncturing the mistakes of the buyer with barbed arrows of criticism. It is discouraging for the salesman to be obliged to have to make good the buyer's mistakes on the road; but the true salesmen, the really big men in the profession, are those who have long since learned that to be free is to have power to overcome all obstacles.

There should be no cause for discouragement because of an occasional error in judgment on the part of the buyers. There are enough good sellers left in the line to insure a substantial increase in your sales, if you will devote some of the time to finding them that is spent in trying to persuade other salesmen that the buyers who do not come up to your standard of fitness should be operating peanut stands.

A FOLLOW UP SYSTEM.

A salesman soon becomes associated in the mind of a retailer with the firm he represents. In the same way, a firm which advertises persistently in trade newspapers soon succeeds in associating its advertising with its salesmen, in the minds of the retailers. It pleases a reader of a trade newspaper to see the advertising of a firm with which he has dealings. It tends to confirm him in the opinion that he deals with up-to-date, progressive people. When he reads the ad. he thinks of the firm's traveling representative. Thus, though personal calls may be more less infrequent, the firm which advertises in the trade press succeeds in keeping itself and its salesmen green in the memory of retailers.

An Intimate Friend

[By One Who Knows]

An intimate friend is a good thing in business as well as in social life.

You can trust his word and accept his counsel with confidence.

The trade newspaper is the retailer's intimate friend.

Year in and year out it publishes those things which tend to stimulate his ideas, improve his business methods and increase his profits.

As a medium through which manufacturers and wholesalers can secure the attention and confidence of the retailer it is without a peer.

It introduces their goods, backs up their travellers and paves the way for permanent business relationships.

For every reader is a probable customer.

CHEESE AND BUTTER BULLETIN

Montreal, October 21, 1908.

Now that the end of the season is approaching, the prospects for the winter loom up in close view. It will be remembered that an exceedingly unfortunate condition prevailed in Canada last year, namely, the shortage of feed which rendered it necessary for many farmers to kill off a certain number of their cows.

From all evidence now at hand this unfortunate circumstance will not be present this winter. While there is very little feed in the pastures, farmers have plenty of corn, and their silos are well filled. From this it will be observed that there is a good possibility of the cows coming out next spring in good condition. The local price has gone up so as to put butter beyond an export basis. Last week there was not a single package exported, which amply demonstrates the fact, that the export demand will not stand for excessive prices under normal conditions. This condition after all is rather remarkable as there is plenty of room in the English market for Canadian butter and English people have been taking our butter in generous amounts even in the face of high prices. This, however, was thought to be a little irregular, and in pursuance of some ulterior motive of a highly speculative character. Australian and New Zealand new grass butter is now on its way to the English market, and it is thought this butter will realize good profits as that variety of butter is very scarce and always in good demand in the English markets.

Cheese has certainly offered a good many problems this year, and a number of them are a long way from solution yet. Everyone suposed that the long drought would curtail the make, and that prices would soar. This looked like a reasonable conjecture, but much to the surprise of everybody, the receipts were not diminished, but instead increased. The impression had gained currency in England that Canada was suffering from a frightful drought, and, consequently, the Englishmen looked for small supplies from Canada. When, however, the true state of affairs was made known to them that the bottom had dropped out of the market owing to increased supplies, as they hardly know what to expect of this side. The Trade Bulletin publishes the following regarding New Zealand cheese: "There can be no doubting the fact that reports that have reached us of sales of large quantities of New Zealand cheese are correct. Letters, not only from England, but from New Zealand direct confirm the reports, and include names of buyers, quantity and price. A report also comes to us of another matter which may prove interesting. Heretofore all early or fodder cheese made in New Zealand have been shipped to England, often in a very green state, the result being that on arrival a large proportion turned out to be dry, stiff and hard, and showing no meat. In reference to this the report says: "Such will not be the case this year, it being known that a good many factories have been equipped for making butter, as well as cheese, and that where factories have two plants in most cases they will make butter at the beginning of the new season, thus curtailing the early output of fodder cheese in New Zealand. This confirms a statement to this effect made during the summer by a gentleman interested in dairying in New Zealand who passed through Montreal on a business and pleasure trip combined. A good deal is being said about the anticipated large make of New Zealands during the season just opening, but it is a bit premature to say just what may, or may not happen. Away back in March and April last, it was predicted that the make of Canadian would be very heavy this year, and that prices would be away down. Those who knew the conditions on this side failed to see where a big early make was to come from, it being generally expected that the scarcity of feed and poor condition of cattle would mean a small early or fodder make, which turned out to be correct. Then the long dry spell came on, resulting in some sections suffering very severely, and naturally curtailing the make very much. When it is said that the receipts are some 150,000 to 160,000 boxes behind those of last year, it will show that those who predicted a big increase in production of Canadian cheese during this season, were somewhat premature in their predictions."

Total exports since May 1, 1,537,369 boxes, as compared with 1,775,309 boxes for the corresponding period of last year.

Total receipts since May 1, 1,667,221 boxes, as compared with 1,839,397 boxes for the corresponding week of last year. The local market is quiet, with westerns quoted at 12⅜c for colored and 12¼c for white, and easterns at 11¾c to 11⅞c.

THE PROVISION SITUATION

Toronto Oct. 21, 1908.

The situation presents very similar features to those reported last week with the British market still feeling easy and the local market a little lower.

The strike among the Manchester cotton operatives referred to a couple of weeks ago, still continues to have a noticeable effect on the British market. This, with the usual heavy shipments of Danish bacon and some supplies of Irish, have kept the market well supplied and there has been little demand for the Canadian product.

The packers, too, have not been exceedingly anxious to ship lately. During the pronounced scarcity of hogs some weeks ago the local market was pretty well cleaned up and with a continuance of the good business at home which has been a feature all summer, packers have been anxious to get stocked up again. Business continues very good, though an easier feeling in lard and other pork products is becoming noticeable.

Deliveries during the week have been fairly large with the quality good. The price has eased off a little since last week, $6 to $6.10 being offered to-day for hogs f.o.b. October usually sees a large run of hogs, this being about the time when farmers get them into shape for killing but so far this year this has not materialized. It is expected, however, this large run will come in in a couple of weeks, and unless the British market improves in the meantime prices to farmers will be almost sure to drop another notch.

The United States markets have been on a somewhat unsteady basis during the week, as is shown in the following review from the New York Journal of Commerce: "Hog products have been subject to manipulation to a greater or less extent throughout the week. That there should be a determined assault on the long interests, with the freer movement of hogs was generally expected and created considerable nervousness among those who had accumulated considerable purchases of future contracts. This actually did take place and was followed by a steadier market. The receipts of hogs, however, have not been exceptionally large and moreover, have proved to be generally of an inferior quality. The cash markets have been fairly steady in tone and as a rule stocks have been rather light.

About the middle of the week there was an effort made to force prices to a higher level, with some success. The market has proved very sensitive and easily subject to speculative influences. Domestic consumption of the products is normal and as has been observed the inferior quality in a large measure offsets the free receipts at packing points, so that there seemed some hope of steadying the market. As the week progressed the long interests showed a disposition to proceed with caution, until at least a more definite basis of calculation could be reached. Furthermore, there is a rather marked belief that it would be better to await the coming election before going into extensive operations on either side of the market. With this uncertainty eliminated there will undoubtedly be improved buying, both at home and abroad. There is also the uncertainty of a new crop season as a disturbing factor, which is likely to influence the foreign trade in holding off to await developments. As a general thing, commission houses advised their customers to purchase on each break and in the belief that the situation did not and could not warrant much lower prices."

PROVISION MARKETS

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS—The provision market is firm and prices have been maintained. Receipts of hogs have been very limited and this has increased the tendency to firmness of the market, Another factor which has contributed to this tendency is the fact that stocks held are exceedingly light.

PROVISIONS—Business has undergone a change and this week's trading has been very slow, compared with a week ago. Supplies are freer, but demand has declined very appreciably. Prices have begun to come down, especially on bacon, hams and backs, and an easier tendency is noted in lard lines. A further decline in prices is expected in almost all provision lines before the end of next week. The hogs now being offered are of better quality and are more numerous. Price quotations are a little easier on hog supplies, which, no doubt, has much to do with the decline in the price of hog products.

THE FLOUR AND CEREAL MARKETS

Flour Advanced by Ontario Millers—Oats and Oatmeal Declined in Ontario, Easier in Quebec.

The market this week shows several changes of interest to retailers.

Business continues excellent in flour in all parts of the country, and the markets are exceedingly firm. Millers are jubilant over the present situation and the mills are running merrily to full capacity. These conditions were reflected in Ontario by an advance of 10c on all lines during the week. Other markets are firm, though no direct change is shown.

The oat market, on the other hand, is easier for the present, chiefly as a result of large shipments of western oats, which have relieved the partial scarcity existing for some time. In Ontario this resulted in a decline of 15c; in Quebec the change was not felt to such an extent. This condition is only regarded as temporary, however, and it seems likely that the firm conditions prevailing during the past few weeks will be resumed shortly.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR—Owing to the election campaign being in its last feverish spasm of activity, dealers report slightly slower trade this week. This, however, does not imply dullness, because the market is extremely active, but not quite what it was last week. It is thought that from now forward till Christmas at any rate, the market will be very active. Buyers in the country have been holding off expecting lower prices, but as this seems to be much like pursuing a phantom, they have commenced buying freely. There is somewhat of a scarcity of stocks on the spot, and stocks in the country are virtually exhausted. These conditions have given the market a firmer undertone, but for the time being prices remain as quoted at last issue.

ROLLED OATS—A weak undertone characterizes this market this week, and some dealers have dropped their prices from five to ten cents. This condition is looked upon by the larger dealers as a fleeting one, and now that the weather has gotten colder they expect prices to go back to their former level. Sales have not been large during the last week which is attributed to the warm weather that has prevailed lately.

FEED—Supplies of bran are slightly more liberal this week. There has been some inquiry for export, but so far the scarcity of stock has rendered this out of the question. The smaller mills are contributing more freely, to. There is a good demand for shorts and middlings. There is no change in quotations.

TORONTO.

FLOUR—The exceedingly strong wheat markets and the fact that millers sought a more stable selling basis account for an advance of 10c on all lines of flour this week. Millers say they have been doing the work of milling too cheaply and that the present prices will be more satisfactory to all concerned. Prices look as if they would continue at present level at least during the winter.

CEREALS—The arrival of a large quantity of western oats of good quality caused an easing off of the market this week and a drop of 15c on oats and oatmeal occurred. This came as rather a surprise, but is only regarded as temporary, the general feeling being that the market will strengthen up again when these oats are disposed of. With this in view it would seem good business for retailers to secure fairly heavy stocks during the present decline. Prices now ruling are as follows:

Rolled wheat in barrels, 100 lbs		2 85
" oats in bags, per bag 90 lbs		2 65
Oatmeal, standard and granulated, in bags 98 lbs		2 95

"Chase & Co., Jacksonville, Florida, appreciating the value of the suggestions of Prof. Powell, of the United States Government, after his investigations in California, are devoting special attention to the handling features of oranges and grapefruit this year.

"Their picking baskets are woven willow, canvas padded, and they have issued strict instructions to every employee—from local agent to pickers—that the fruit is to be handled with the greatest care and everything possible done to avoid injuring or bruising."

Niagara Grapes and Canadian Apples the Chief Native Fruit Lines—California Valencia Orange Season Over—First Shipment of Messina Lemons—Canada to Try California Tomatoes.

The season for native fruit lines is drawing to a close. Some late peaches and pears are offered, and grapes, too, are fairly plentiful. British Columbia has expressed a preference for Niagara grapes over California's, a carload having reached Vancouver a week ago. Apples are improving in quality, and judging from the prices obtained this week in Liverpool, the packers in Ontario have profited by the lesson learned by Eastern shippers and are sending only good stock.

California Valencia oranges are nearly over. They have been excellent stock and are fine right up to the end. They demand twice the price asked for Floridas, because of the care taken in picking, packing and shipping. Canadian markets have probably seen the last arrival of Valencias for this season, but California navels should be good stock about December 1. Floridas, too, should improve. The great complaint about them is that the early stock is picked too soon and rushed on the market while it is yet green. In this regard Chase & Co., who pack great quantities of Florida fruit, have issued instructions based on the report of the United States Government inspector, who commended the California fruit-growers' system of picking and packing and have sent the same to their agents and all pickers and packers in their employ, emphasizing the fact that the utmost care must be taken with all fruit in the future. For this purpose a specially-padded basket is to be used by pickers and no fruit that is at all bruised will be packed. This is commendable, and the company will be repaid for the attention given to the proper placing of the fruit on the market.

Cape Cod cranberries are advancing, which gives the Nova Scotias a chance to get on the markets away from home. They appear to be first-class stock. The first shipment of this season's Italian lemons left Messina on October 19, and until their arrival some of the Canadian markets are filling orders with California stock. Florida pineapples have made their appearance but until next week no large quantities will be arriving.

Large-sized Spanish onions are very scarce at present and have gone up in price. Canadian Danvers, however, are plentiful and good enough to meet demands. Potatoes are selling readily. California will send to the Canadian markets before the end of the month some samples of its tomatoes, which are said to be like Canadian hot-house stock. This will be the first time for the Canadian markets to take tomatoes from that state. The importation will be watched with interest.

MONTREAL.

FRUITS—Grapes have been in good demand, and prices have been favorable. Cape Cod cranberries are a little higher this week, being quoted at $9.50 instead of $9, as last week. Nova Scotia stock has commenced to arrive, and is being quoted at $7.50. Verdelli lemons are stronger at $3.25 instead of from $2.65 to $3. Other lines remain the same as at the last quotation.

VEGETABLES—Potatoes are somewhat easier this week, being quoted at 75c to 95c for the native stock, and Green Mountain at 65c to 90c. Carrots are a little lower this week, some being sold at 50c per bag. Other lines remain the same as last quoted. Trade has not been very brisk during the week.

FISH—Fish in nearly all lines is a shade easier this week, which is due to the fact that supplies arriving are large. The demand is good, and is increasing. Gaspe salmon (frozen) is the only line which has varied in any upward way, which is quoted at $18, but is also in some grades quoted as low as $15. The maximum in this case is higher than last week, but the minimum is much lower, so the average is lower. Haddies and kippers are in better supply prices are lower, and demand is increasing for this line. Demand for boneless and prepared fish is steady. Green cod is lower and salt herring remains the same. The demand for bulk oysters has been slow on account of the warm weather, but the cooler weather which has set in ought to brighten up this trade a bit. Advices from the West state that there has been a very good season for sockeye salman.

TORONTO.

GREEN FRUITS—If the weather grows any colder, this week may end the season at the Yonge St. fruit market. Already the commission houses about Church and Colborne Sts. have taken on a busier appearance and not a few traders prefer dealing at the uptown market. Local fruits are about done. Some cheap lines of Canadian peaches and pears are still on the market and quite a few Niagara grapes arrive daily. Very few plums are seen, and what are offered come from Idaho. California blue and Tokay grapes are plentiful, and Spanish lines are up in price. A cloudburst is reported to have destroyed a great many remaining on the trees in the south of Spain and they will hardly be so numerous as was anticipated. U. S. cranberries have advanced 50 cents a barrel, and markets across the line are very firm. Nova Scotia sent a carload of crans. and but for the lighter color no difference can be seen when compared with Cape Cods. A few Ontario cranberries are also offered. Valencia oranges are very scarce, and the market is firming up. Probably the last lot for this season has now arrived. California navels will come along about December 1, but by that time no doubt Floridas will have improved. The first of this season's cut of Messina lemons is on the way and until they arrive California lemons are offered.

VEGETABLES—Potatoes and onions are the principal vegetable lines on which trading has been done. Ontario's still have the call and are lower in price by about five cents. The larger sizes of Spanish onions, those in demand, are very scarce and the price has advanced. Quotations continue at the old figures, though small varieties only are to be had just at present. Canadian onions are plentiful enough and are of good quality, so there is no immediate prospect of a famine in this line. The other native lines are not so much in demand and prices remain unchanged. Tomatoes are declining in supply. California will this month send along to Toronto a car of tomatoes from that State—the first to come to Canada. They will be sent on trial and if they prove good sellers no doubt these tomatoes will be added as a regular line.

FISH—A great range of fish lines is offered. Fresh fish continue good in receipt and large quantities of frozen fish are offering. A small consignment of dressed catfish (bullheads) is the novelty of the week. Oysters, too, are ready sellers. In fact, all lines are provoking good business. Demand is splendid, though as yet not much call is made for dried and smoked lines. Prices are the same as a week ago.

CUTTING PRICES.

(With Apologies to "Hamlet.")

To cut or not to cut. That is the question.
Whether it is not better in the end
To let the chap who knows not the worth
Have the business at cut-throat prices, or
To take up arms against his competition,
And by opposing cut for cut, end it.
To cut—and by cutting put the other cut
Out of business—'tis a consummation
Devoutly to be wished. To cut—to slash—
Perchance myself to get it in the neck—
Aye—there's the rub; for when one starts to meet
The other fellow's prices, 'tis like as not
He's up against it good and hard.
To cut and to slash is not to end the confusion.
And the many evils the trade is pestered with,
Nay, nay, Pauline; 'tis but the forerunner
Of debt and mortgage such a course portends.
'Tis well to get the price the goods are worth
And not be bluffed into selling them for what
So-and-So will sell his goods for.
Price-cutting doth appear unseemly
And fit only for the man who knows not
What his goods are worth, and who, ere long,
By stress of making vain comparison
'Twixt bank account and liabilities,
Will make his exit from the business.

FACTS ABOUT GROCERIES

Information of Interest to Grocers and Clerks About the Goods They Sell. Something About Matches.

Matches are manufactured in many ways and with numerous kinds of machines, and for that reason a description of an operation in one factory would not apply to another. Nearly every manufacturing company has machinery made specially for its use, and covered by patents, and it also employs processes discovered or devised by its own chemists and mechanics, and kept secret to prevent rivals from obtaining and profiting by them. Some time ago an American company sold the right to use its special machines in France, obtaining $100 000 in cash and an equal sum yearly as royalty. This shows how much depends on the machines, and how much a match manufacturer will pay to get the best. Only by using the best that is obtainable is competition possible. A single machine has been known to turn out 177,926,400 matches in one day—boxed and labeled ready for shipment.

Some matches are shaved with the grain from sawed blocks, some are cut both ways by saws. In some factories the blocks are boiled to make them cut easily. By some machines a boiled or steamed log is revolved on its own axis and a shaving—the thickness of a match—is cut round and round. This shaving is at the same time cut into lengths and split into match sticks. There is hardly a limit to the varieties of methods employed. Round matches are made by forcing them through dies. The Japanese make paper matches which are wood after all.

Primitive Salt Manufacture.

The method of manufacturing salt in Colima (Mexico) is exceedingly interesting owing to its primitiveness. About the end of February a large portion of the floating population within a radius of several hundred miles come down to the sea coast at or near the salt marshes of Cuyutlan. The method of extracting the salt is as follows: A lattice work of branches is erected on poles at a height of about four feet from the ground; the surface earth around the banks of the salt marsh to a depth of some four inches is then excavated with earthenware pieces of pottery and thrown on top of the lattice work of branches. Water is then thrown on the earth and as it percolates is caught in large earthenware pans below. These pans are then put in the sun to allow the water to evaporate, leaving the salt in the bottom of the pan. The instant that the rainy season commences the industry is at an end, but so great is the demand in the entire Republic of Mexico for this class of salt, and so remunerative is the production, that from 5,000 to 10,000 persons annually come to Cuyutlan for the "salt season." Another interesting thing about the industry is that the entire town is devoured by cows every year. This is accounted for by the fact that the houses or, more strictly speaking, huts, are built of rushes or swamp grass. These huts, to the number of several hundred, are erected every February and when abandoned in July are at once devoured by the cattle of the surrounding country. Shops, inns, storehouses and all residences are built of this material woven over bamboo framework, and by the end of July or the middle of August the entire place has disappeared.

Sugar As a Disinfectant.

Prof. Trilbert, of the Pasteur Institute at Paris, has demonstrated recently that burning sugar develops formic acetylene-hydrogen, one of the most powerful antiseptic gases known. Five grams of suggar (77.16 grains) were burned under a glass bell holding ten quarts. After the vapor had cooled bacilli of typhus, tuberculosis, cholera, smallpox, etc., were placed in the bell in open glass tubes, and within half an hour all the microbes were dead. If sugar is burned in a closed vessel containing putrified meat or the contents of rotten eggs, the offensive odor disappears at once. The popular faith in the disinfecting qualities of burned sugar appears, therefore, well founded.

H. F. Woodburn, Toronto, has joined the staff of Thomas Wood & Co., and will represent them in the Ottawa section. W. A. Twadelle, of Boston, will also represent the same house in the Eastern Townships and west to Kingston.

CURRANTS

Ask for "Meyer's"

Fine Filiatra

Choice Amalias

Choice Gulf

Choicest Vostizza

THE leading importers realize that a large section of the retail grocery trade knows good currants and will demand them. For this reason a very large quantity of our fruit is being landed ex the direct steamers "Bellona" and "Jacona"—a quantity sufficient to supply every retail grocer in Canada with several cases.

For reasons known to himself your jobber may be one of the few who has neglected to import our brands—who may want to sell you currants branded with a high-sounding but fictitious name. If so—

Ask for Meyer's

Our name on the case is an absolute guarantee that the contents are the finest currants of their growth or grade—are honest value. Insist and you can get them, then watch your business grow—and your profits, too.

don't do any doubting. They know that Old Homestead Brand has that merit in its preparation that ensures positive sales. Line up with the Old Homestead grocers and hear the ding-ding of your cash register as it records in "silver" tones the story of a success built upon quality.

QUALITY VERSUS PRICE

The tea the public know most about is naturally the first to be selected by you. There is more real profit selling tea already well known for uniform excellence and absolute reliability than in any trashy tea at a "cheap" price. It is quality and not price which gives tea value. By pushing you will get the best results, because the recollection of its fine quality and delicious flavor remain long after the price has been forgotten. To judge tea by its price is a mistake. Let your taste decide the merit of "SALADA."

"SALADA"

MORAL.—Sell better tea and you will have better business.

As Pure as Windsor Salt

$1.00 Sold $25 Worth of Groceries

It was a thirty-mile trip to town and the instructions of Mrs. Smith to husband John were to get a dollar's worth of Windsor Salt at the grocer's—naturally husband John secured his entire list of groceries at the store that was stocked with "Windsor." He spent twenty-five dollars in that particular store.

The reason why Mrs. Smith was determined to have Windsor Salt was and is plainly evident—its uniform excellence, purity, whiteness and dryness. It pays to sell the salt that helps to sell other goods in the store.

THE IDEAL DUSTER

Solid Chunks of Comfort result from the use of the Ideal. No minor domestic problem agitates the housewife more than Dust, it is like dish-washing, constant—in season, out of season—in fact, it has no seasons. The public's necessity our opportunity to supply the Ideal—unique in construction—following the lines of a natural hand, giving 11 square inches of wiping surface on top of the cloth. The arm and wrist action permits the user, without climbing or stooping, to reach the hidden dust—on tops of doors, lintels, etc., and on polished floors—giving the hand-wiping results with none of the drudgery. The handle is in two 5-ft. sections, to retail: First section, with head, 35c.; Second extension handle, 15c.; Complete, 50c. Without being presumptuous may we not ask, are not the grocer's per cent. profits largely increased by the lines—to him specialties—sold? Up-to-date specialties are good bait for new customers. The Woodenware and Sundries Jobbers stock our lines—there is 50% to the retailer in the Ideal—make a note of it on your "wants slip."

It Hurts YOU and YOUR Trade

if the tea you recommend is not the best you can procure

Some of your customers will insist on getting certain brands, which you doubtless know are not as good as some other one; but some of these customers have very decided opinions and must be humored. The great majority, however, are influenced by your opinion, and these are the very ones whose trade you are most likely to hold providing they find that the goods you recommend are always to be relied on.

Tea is one of the most important of the many things sold in a grocery or general store. You know from experience probably that a customer who complains about tea soon complains about other things and is dissatisfied all round.

You have also found that some customers who did not like the tea you recommended did not complain but went to another store when they needed to buy again.

To come right down to the point. Do you think it pays to push or recommend any tea until you are satisfied yourself that it is the best tea on the market?

Nothing but the best is good enough for your customers.

Now I believe Red Rose Tea is the best tea on the Canadian market and I believe any independent expert judge of tea will back up this opinion.

If you are not selling Red Rose Tea and feel that the best is none too good, order a sample case. Then form your own opinion, don't be persuaded one way or the other by my travellers or any one else. Judge for yourself.

If it is the best you will continue to buy it; if it isn't you won't.

Interesting Revelations in "Guild" Case

Crown Witnesses Tell How the Wholesalers' Arrangements Interfered With Their Businesses — Quasi-Wholesalers Unable to Buy Sugar, Tobacco and Other Staples—The "Equalized Rates System" Explained—Defence Gets in Some Strong Points on Crown Evidence.

The trial of the Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Guild, which was reported at some length up to the time of going to press last week, was continued on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday before Chief Justice Falconbridge at the City Hall, Toronto. It was anticipated that the case would be carried through to the end at this sitting and some surprise was manifested when on Thursday His Lordship intimated that he would not be able to sit on the case longer than the one week. Following this, it was announced on Friday that the case would be held over until Tuesday, November 10.

Up till Wednesday afternoon the evidence submitted had been chiefly the reading of letters from the President and members of the guild to other members and manufacturers, the Crown seeking in this way to build up the charge of conspiracy against the defendants. On Thursday and Friday the evidence was rather more interesting, for a number of witnesses were called, who gave a good deal of interesting information as to the working out of the guild arrangements and their effect on the trade.

The Defence Outlined.

The line of defence was outlined by E. F. B. Johnston, chief counsel for the defendants, on Wednesday afternoon, during his cross-examination of J. Stanley Cook, the Secretary of the guild. It will be submitted that the guild had nothing to do with preventing the retailer to buy from the manufacturer if he so desired. The point aimed at was to prevent the retailer from getting the same rebate from the manufacturer as the wholesaler was receiving. This, it is maintained, is absolutely necessary for the existence of the wholesale houses, as otherwise they would be forced out of existence, and since the wholesaling system is economically the cheapest means of distributing the goods, prices would be higher to the consumer in the end.

Wednesday Afternoon Session.

On the hearing being resumed on Wednesday afternoon, a letter from J. Stanley Cook to A. McDonald Co., Winnipeg, was read, complaining that the firm had sold Edwardsburg starch contrary to agreement.

"A violation of the rules renders you liable to confiscation of your rebate by the refiners," the letter said.

"That seems to settle the point as to where the forfeits went," commented Justice Falconbridge. "It states that the rebates would be confiscated by the refiners. Apparently it was a sort of premium used to enforce the rules."

"That is a fact," from Mr. Johnston.

This was the last letter of the budget submitted by the Crown.

J. Stanley Cook was then cross-examined by Mr. Johnston. He stated that he was appointed Secretary of the Dominion Guild in 1901. The guild had been in existence for from ten to eighteen years before that, but it was not until 1904 that by-laws were framed. There had been a good deal of price-cutting, and the object of the by-laws was to do no more than define what the regulations should be in regard to that matter. There was no penalty attached to a violation of these by-laws except loss of membership. There was no deposit of any description to be forfeited. If rebates were withheld they were not given to the guild.

"How many cases have there been in which the rebate penalty was enforced?"

"I do not know of any single case in which the rebate penalty was finally enforced."

Explaining why several firms referred to had had difficulty with the guild he said that Revillion Bros., of Edmonton, originally conducted both a wholesale and retail business. They have since cut off the retail department and are now members of the guild. Similar difficulty had been experienced with Broissand & Co., of St. Catharines, Rundle of New Brunswick, and Baird & Peters, St. John.

"What was your object in getting the list of direct buyers from the refiners?" asked Mr. Johnston.

"To send them circulars and any information that would be advantageous to them to have."

"And what the guild was trying to do was to get the manufacturer to so reduce his prices to the wholesale trade as to make it profitable to the trade to deal in his goods?"

"The rebate was intended to have the effect of giving the wholesaler his margin."

"Who fixed the listed prices?" was the next question.

"The manufacturers."

"What was the connection then between the wholesaler and the manufacturer?"

"Proportionate profits and the restriction of rebate to the wholesale trade."

"Did the manufacturer fix the selling prices in all cases?"

"Absolutely."

And then the members of the guild arranged with the manufacturer for a certain rebate for handling his particular line of goods?"

"That is right."

The Question of Rebate.

"The question was," Mr. Johnston continued, "whether or not the rebate was to be confined to the wholesaler or was to include the retailer?"

"That was the whole question so far as the wholesale trade was concerned.

"It goes without saying that if the retailers got the same rebate as the wholesalers there would be no room for the wholesalers?"

"They would go out of existence."

"If the retailers got the rebate it would be to their advantage?"

"To their very considerable advantage."

"And if it was carried out to the full extent there would be nobody to whom the wholesalers could sell?"

"That is the fact."

Equalized Rates System.

Explaining the equalized rates system as applied to sugar, Mr. Cook said that system was arranged to enable direct buyers of sugar in the wholesale trade to get a margin. By it every wholesaler was put in the same position, except that there was a difference of rate according to the distance from Montreal. The price was set by the refiners at Montreal, being the current price for sugar. To this initial price was added a percentage to cover the cost of shipment to various wholesale centres. In some cases this did cover cost of shipment, in others it did not.

"So what your guild did was to act as distributors of the goods of the various manufacturers?" Mr. Johnston asked.

"That is the principle of the wholesale trade."

"As a matter of fact there were many wholesalers getting the rebate who were not members of the guild?"

"That is so."

"Was there any list absolutely controlled by the Guild?"

"No."

The Reason for the Fighting.

"The whole fight for years has been to get better terms, better profits and protection against the retail people getting goods at the same rates as the wholesalers?"

"Yes."

"Is there anything in the agreements to prevent a retailer from getting his goods direct from the market?"

"No, the only difference is that he cannot get the same terms as the wholesaler."

Cross-examined by Mr. Washington, for the Crown, Mr. Cook said that the wholesalers who were not members of the Guild and who bought direct from the manufacturers had either to adhere to the prices fixed by the manufacturers or be disciplined.

A Toronto Grocer Speaks.

W. W. Clancy, a grocer, of Bloor St., West, Toronto, was called by the Crown. He told the story of the formation of the Provincial Groceries, Limited, which carried on business for some time on Front Street, Toronto, being organized in 1903. It was a co-operative concern, made up of retailers who bought from it at wholesale prices. Profits over six per cent. were refunded to those who bought from the company. The company, however, was not too successful and went into liquidation in 1905.

"What led to this result?" Mr. Blackstock asked.

'We couldn't get goods to sell at a profit."

"Why?"

"Because we were not members of the Guild. We approached manufacturers to buy goods, but they referred us to the Guild, stating that they could not sell goods unless we became members of the Guild. We applied to the Guild for membership, but we did not succeed in getting admission."

"What goods were those you could not get?"

'Sugar, tobacco, starch and vinegar, and we could not get Aylmer brand canned goods nor the best brands of salmon. We approached the manufacturers and wrote letters to find out why they would not sell us goods, but they simply referred us to the Guild. James Pyle, of New York, would not even sell us Pearline because we were not in the Guild,"

Could Not Get Into Guild.

"We couldn't get into the Guild, either," continued the witness. "That meant we lost money. We would have to buy sugar, for instance, from a retailer, and then sell it again, sometimes at a loss of 5 or 6 cents a hundred. We would have had a good business to-day if we could have got the goods."

Questioned concerning the effect of the Guild upon the trade, the witness said:

"A man cannot become a wholesale grocer unless he goes into the Guild."

"What effect have the arrangements of the Guild on the prices at which the commodities reach the consumer?"

"I cannot say, but in some cases prices are higher to-day than they were. Canned tomatoes, for instance, are selling at from 90 to 95 cents this year, although the crop was the biggest on record, and eight or nine years ago they sold at from 60 to 65 cents. Whether the combination is in any degree responsible for the increase I am not in a position to say."

Cross-examined by Mr. Johnston, Mr. Clancy said that in refusing to supply goods to his company, the manufacturers might have been influenced by its financial standing.

"Did you stick to the wholesale business when you gave up the co-operative idea?" Mr. Blackstock asked.

"Yes, even more closely than the others. We didn't make a practice of selling to hotels or other similar large buyers at all."

'The retail grocery trade at that time was demoralized," said the witness, and a little later, "If retailers could buy direct from the manufacturers they would be bigger men, and consequently would be in a position to sell cheaper to the consumer."

The court then adjourned.

THURSDAY MORNING'S SESSION.

Thursday morning's session was a particularly interesting one, the examination of crown witnesses being proceeded with. Three of these were called during the morning and gave evidence regarding the alleged difficulties they had had in bucking up against the Guild arrangements, particularly in regard to tobacco and sugar.

A. McLean, Kingston, the first witness, said he was partly a wholesale and partly a retail grocer. He had been in business since '63 or '64. Never had had any trouble in buying sugar from refiners till 1881. He saw the refiners repeatedly from '81 on, and since this prosecution started he had seen Mr. Labatt, of the St. Lawrence Co., and Mr. Drummond's son. The last time he got a decided "No," from Mr. Watson, of the Canada Sugar Co. Mr. Labatt, of the St. Lawrence Co., said he wanted the wholesale trade to make money. They couldn't do so other than by adhering to the Guild agreement. He had also dealt with the Acadia Sugar Company for some years. Had seen Mr. Cutler recently, who said he couldn't do anything for him. He had also dealt largely with Sir William Macdonald in tobacco, and for 12 years had had no trouble, Later Sir William sent him a letter saying that in the interests of his business he would have to cut him off.

Mr. Johnston objected that the letter had no bearing on this particular charge. But it was allowed, subject to objection by Chief Justice Falconbridge.

"I find it advisable to confine my accounts to the wholesale trade," read the letter, "you had better dispose only of my stock you have on hand."

Witness said he had seen Mr. Macdonald some time ago. At that time he said he had to protect his business, that wholesalers were his best customers. He would keep him on if he would sell at the same prices as these men sold at. Mr. Macdonald kept him on his list for two years and then cut him off altogether. He had seen Mr. Macdonald once or twice since. He was always friendly, but not enough so to sell him goods.

Tried to Get In.

He had communicated with the Guild once through its agent in Kingston, when he was cornered. He saw Messrs. Craig & Sutherland. They said they would put his application in. "I have never heard anything of this since," he said.

A letter fronr Edgar Wills, secretary of the Toronto Guild to McLean, dated Sept. 16, 1888, said: "As soon as you make a change in your business so as to qualify as a wholesale house we will allow you admittance. If your name is passed by the Kingston Guild there will be no difficulty in your becoming affiliated with the Guild."

"Did you try to get tobacco from any other companies?" the witness was asked.

"Yes, but I wasn't able to do satisfactory business with them."

Letters were read in support of this from the McAlpine Tobacco Co., Toronto, and Goldstein & Co., Montreal, dated in 1888 and 1889, to the effect that they could not supply Mr. McLean with tobacco because the guild and wholesalers had combined against them for supplying him.

How it Affected Business.

"What was effect of all this on your business?" counsel asked.

"I was trying to get to the position of a wholesaler, was working as retailer, trying to get up. For 45 years I had been trying to work my way to the front."

"What was the effect of the guild arrangement on trade?"

Mr. Johnston objected to this question, saying, "He cannot speak as to that."

"After 55 years' experience as a grocer he ought to be able to speak," Mr. Washington said.

The question was admitted subject to objection.

Aged Witness Breaks Down.

The witness, however, was unable to answer the questions. Seventy-six years of age and noticeably feeble, the strain of the examination was too much for him and he broke down. His Lordship thought Mr. McLean was faint from standing so long and ordered a chair brought for him, but the old man was completely overcome and had to be taken from the witness box for the time.

A Port Hope Grocer's Plaint.

John Curtis, called, said he was a retailer and wholesaler in a small way in Port Hope.

He had never bought sugars direct from the refiners and had gotten tobaccos only from the Empire people. About eight years ago he found he couldn't do this. When he asked about it the company said the guild wouldn't take their tobacco until they had worked up a trade. Then the guild said they would take control of it if it was sold only to guild. This caused his jobbing trade to fall off. He used to buy starches and syrups from the Edwardsburg Starch Co., but in 1905 was told that the order must come through the wholesale houses.

"What wholesale house shall we place your order with," read the letter.

Witness had to buy Eddy's goods, but was shut off on them also.

Mr. Curtis told of going to see the late Mr. Ince in Toronto, when he told him that sugar was 12 cents higher in Port Hope than in Toronto, Mr. Ince called his son and said, "Willie, is this the case?"

He was sent to Edgar Wills, then to Col. Davidson. These said they couldn't do anything for him, so he had to drop it at the time.

The Equalized Rates Again.

"How does the equalized rate book affect Port Hope?"

In answer to the question the witness read a list showing how the towns west of Belleville and east of Toronto were affected. The rate at Port Hope was 26 cents; Peterboro', 13 cents; Lindsay, 16; Toronto, 10; Belleville, 10; Oshawa, 24; Scarboro, 19; Hamilton 11 cents.

"How does this affect your trade?"

Witness said it destroyed his wholesale trade entirely. It forced him to put the price up to consumers. There was no other way to bring in Canadian refined. He used to bring up New York sugar by boat, but this did not prove satisfactory.

"How does the equalized rates compare with the regular freight rates at Port Hope?".

"We can't get any regular rate at Port Hope. The Grand Trunk won't give us any satisfaction."

Trouble With Sugar and Salt.

Mr. Curtis told of going to the St. Lawrence Sugar Co. in April or May the Summer after guild arrangement came in force. He was asked if he belonged to guild, and on saying no, was refused. He then went to the Redpath Co., but received the same treatment. He used to buy salt, dealing with Ransford, of Clinton. The latter said all jobbers were cut off and would sell him no longer.

"Any other commodities," asked Mr. Washington, "which interfered with your business."

"I think I had some difficulty in getting shredded wheat."

"What is the effect of the guild arrangements on the retailer," he was asked.

"I have been in grocery business 25 years," he said, "and see the effect in this way. The traveler comes along and says, 'who will you have this through.' I think it has affected business in putting the price up."

A Fair System If Rightly Worked.

Cross-questioned by Mr. Johnston he said that system at present in operation among manufacturers and wholesalers was fair if properly carried out. He did not think the profit allowed by manufacturers was more than a living profit. In small quantities less than cars it was only reasonable, in larger lots it seemed a little more.

"Articles are cut closer than they were some years ago?"

"To the retailer, yes?"

"What would be a fair percentage of profit added to the price of articles?"

"I sell sugars at 10 cents on the dollar, on credit. Sometimes less."

"What would be the net profit on whole of your business to-day?"

"About 15 per cent. or less; sugar, 10 per cent.; tobaccos, 8 per cent."

"What should be the gross profits on a wholesale business?"

"I couldn't say."

Witness did not know whether the profit the wholesalers are making is more than reasonable because he did not know how much it was. The credits of the wholesaler would be larger than with the retailer and with failures among retailers their losses would be heavy.

Questioned regarding the nature of his business witness said he had been doing a jobbing business with small general stores in the vicinity ever since he started business. He had no travelers and only reached those whom the regular grip men did not call on.

Referring again to tobacco, Mr. Johnston asked:—"Do you know the rate wholesalers make on MacDonald's tobacco?"

"Four cents a pound. I never got them at the same rate as the wholesalers."

Could Buy at List Prices.

"Could you always buy sugar, starch, etc., at the list prices?" Mr, Johnston continued.

"Yes."

"The reason you didn't get these goods at discount prices was that you were not a wholesaler?"

"Yes."

"What do you do if the retailers in Port Hope cut?"

"Don't do anything. We can't help it."

"But you don't like it?"

"No."

Questioned as to how he thought the present system might be improved, he said he would amend the present system of buying goods so that the wholesaler with a retail counter could buy at wholesale rates."

"Is there anything else you think might be improved?"

"Yes. Travelers should not sell to one man at $25 less than to another, offered in baits, etc." he said.

Mr. Johnston then questioned the witness about the freight rates, and suggested that the rates as fixed by the equalized system were controlled by the railway companies.

"I don't see that," said Mr. Curtis, "I can't see that it is the railway that is responsible for the rate to Port Hope from Montreal, being 16 cents, while the rate to London is only 12."

"Do you know that it costs almost twice as much to ship from Montreal to Calgary as it does from Montreal to Vancouver?"

"I don't know that."

"Or that the rate from Toronto to Rat Portage is twice as much as from Toronto to Winnipeg?"

"I don't know that."

Mr. Johnston suggested that the rates depended upon whether the location is a competitive point or not.

"Well, I can't see why a firm in Peterboro can get their goods at a cheaper rate than I can in Port Hope, when we are both equally distant from Montreal and Toronto."

"Do you understand the equalized rates system?"

"I have an idea how it works out." Continuing, the witness said he had no objection to the system if it worked properly, but objected that the equalized rates book does not accomplish this purpose.

"If it did, you would have no fault to find?"

"No."

In answer to a question by Mr. Washington, Mr. Curtis explained what he meant by travelers giving a rebate.

"Well," he said, "I have heard about travelers giving a grocer $25 cash, say, and then sending him the sugar at Guild prices. I don't like that kind of business. I like to know what I am paying straight."

"What do you mean by saying the country can get along without combines?" the witness was asked in reply to another answer.

"That there is no need for the Guild. I suppose I get so used to hearing it called a combine that I call it one myself."

A Canner's Story.

Wm. J. Graham, a resident of a suburb of Owen Sound, and a stockholder in the Owen Sound Canning Co., was called. The firm commenced business in 1901, and put up fruits, corn and tomatoes.

"Did you have an interview with Mr. Beckett in 1902 with regard to your pack?"

"Yes, he made me a proposition to sell our pack to Guild. He produced a document representing himself as a Dominion syndicate. They were to sell the pack at a nominal figure, say 65 cents for tomatoes. He claimed all the principal canners had signed this agreement, except the Bloomfield Co. We were to be guided by his directions as to amount of goods to pack. This price would be about the cost price of packing. Mr. Beckett was to allow us a share of profits."

"Did you sign it?"

"No; we didn't come to terms, for I saw nothing in it."

The witness said that in 1901 and 1902 he met with no obstacles in selling their goods to different firms, Eby-Blain, Perkins-Ince, McLachlan & Son, and Vancouver and Victoria houses. In 1903, however, they were met with the objection that members of the Guild could not buy their goods. The pack that year was the general line.

Wholesalers Tied Up With Canners.

He saw W. P. Eby, who said they had gone into an arrangement with the Canners' Consolidated Association, and that they could not buy from him without losing their profits. "Mr. Eby said he was sorry if we d dn't go into this arrangement," the witness continued.

"We did sell him some goods the canners couldn't supply him. Perkins-Ince also wouldn't buy from us."

The same rebuff was met in Owen Sound from McLachlan & Sons. The pack of the factory was sold that year at the coast through brokers. The sales were fair enough there.

In 1904 the firm only packed peas, seeing the market was shut up on other lines. They contracted for the sale of these with the Bloomfield Packing Co. before packing.

"In 1905 we had to sell our pack to the retail trade at about cost price," continued the witness. "We have never packed anything since 1905, because we couldn't make anything without getting into the wholesale market."

Canners Offered to Buy Them Out.

"What is the association you speak of?" he was asked.

"That is the Consolidated Canners, the Canadian Canners, of Hamilton, At that time they asked for a price on our property. The negotiations did not, however, materialize."

The witness said that later he told Mr. David Marshall that the system was a menace to his business and that he would take legal proceedings against them. Mr. Marshall then wrote him a letter.

Mr. Johnston objected to the presentation of the letter as it was evidence relating to the Canadian Consolidated Canners.

"We were tied up by the Canadian Canners just as much as the Owen Sound association was," said Mr. Johnston.

"Are the Canners charged here with being co-conspirators?" asked his Lordship.

"Yes."

"Then I will admit the evidence."

The witness was asked as to the price of canned tomatoes last year. He said he had examined the stock lists and had an idea of the prices. He always kept himself informed of the price.

Estimates Cost of Packing.

Witness was asked to give some idea of the cost of packing tomatoes. He estimated the net cost at about 70 cents, which, with other factors, would bring the total cost to about 88 cents.

"Then the profit last year would be the difference between 88 cents and $1.25?"

"Yes."

He thought the profits last year were excessive and said that the prices this year are considerably less.

To Mr. Johnston the witness admitted that he had been a civil servant for many years, and stated that he paid very little attention to the canning business.

Again, he said that the handling of groceries might be facilitated and cheapened by the placing by the manufacturers of their goods in the hands of the wholesalers for distribution.

"You know that the wholesale grocers were tied up. They would lose their discount if they bought anywhere else than the Canadian Canneries."

No Quarrel With the Guild.

Personally, Mr. Graham said, he had no quarrel with the members of the Guild. He considered the wholesalers very useful members of society. His trouble was with the institution known as the Canadian Canners, Limited.

"Do you mean to say, seriously," said Mr. Johnston, "that you could not really do business ?"

"I mean to say that it was necessary to do business with the wholesale dealers, and we couldn't do it. So we had to sell out."

"Are you quite sure that it was not because the country was not productive enough to keep the business going ?"

"That was not the reason."

Thereupon Mr. Johnston produced a letter written by the son of the witness, manager of the Owen Sound Company, in which he stated that they desired to move because the country about Owen Sound was not favorable to the growing of tomatoes.

"I'll agree to that," said Mr. Graham, "but that doesn't at all alter the fact that we had to dispose of our goods through the wholesalers to carry on a successful business."

This ended the morning session.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON'S SESSION

The afternoon session saw the examination of a couple of other witnesses who claimed to have been interfered with by the Guild arrangement.

The first called was A. McLean, an aged Kingston retailer and jobber, who had broken down in the box in the morning.

Cross-examined by Mr. Johnston he said his business was largely retail at the beginning. He felt the effect of the Guild arrangement in 1881. He then had trouble with sugar because the refiners took the part of the men who sold their goods.

Cruel Law of Nature.

'I couldn't blame the wholesalers for their action," he said. "It was the law of nature and nature was sometimes pretty cruel."

Referring to tobacco, Mr. Johnston asked, "Was there any talk between you and Macdonald on tobacco ?"

"Yes. I sold the goods at 1c per lb. profit and lost on it. Macdonald said to 'Go and sell at the same prices as the other men, and I will keep you on my list.' "

After this he got tobacco from Goldstein & Co., of Montreal, when he also was ordered to discontinue selling it.

"He could not sell to you and keep his discounts ?"

"He did lose it through me."

A letter from the Ontario Sugar Co. to the witness mentioned something about freights being against them in Kingston.

"If wholesale firms go in business it is not unreasonable for them to secure a reasonable profit."

"No," said the witness.

Mr. Washington asked, "When you were buying sugars direct, what profit were you getting ?"

"A fair per cent."

"Has that decreased ?"

"Yes ; we got a better profit then."

This ended Mr. McLean's examination.

Another Canner's Experience.

A. R. Baker, of the Old Homestead Canning Co., Picton, was the next witness.

In 1903 he said he sold goods in some sections to wholesalers and in others to retailers. Has met with difficulty in disposing of goods since pretty regularly. About all the jobbers in Toronto refused to buy his pack until this year by reason of the fact that they had signed with the Canadian Canners and would lose their rebate. This year the company is selling to Eby-Blain, Toronto.

Mr. Washington, aside, "I know what will happen to them."

Prices last year were rather high, the witness said, with No. 1 tomatoes at $1.27½. This was higher than the year before. This year they are lower, with No. 1 at 95 cents.

Cross-examined by Mr. Washington, the witness said the price of canned goods depends on other circumstances than trade arrangements, namely, crop and demand.

"The Canadian Canners are a private corporation," the witness said. "They buy from the growers and other canning companies. They fix a price."

"Do you ?"

"No. I sell to the wholesalers when I can ; if not to the retailer."

"Would it be unfair for canners to sell to retailers ?" Mr. Baker was asked.

He said he couldn't supply the wholesalers with all goods the Canadian Canners can, as the company doesn't go into jams or finer vegetables.

"Unless the canners can't utilize the wholesale trade it would mean an increased cost of goods ?"

"Certainly."

'Doing away with wholesalers would increase the cost of the goods ?"

"Probably so."

"What do you think about the bargain with the Canadian Canners ?"

"If the wholesalers are willing, all right."

The Crop and Prices.

Re-examined by Mr. Washington. "Was there anything in the crop this year which would affect prices ?"

"Some features, but a good deal of dissatisfaction existed all over the country by reason of goods being left on wholesalers' hands."

An Interesting Witness.

B. W. Robertson, Kingston, the gentleman whose name figured largely in correspondence of previous days, was called and proved a most interesting witness. He seemed at first to enjoy the situation and made the most of it to impress his Scotch ancestry and early business training, but later, under Mr. Johnston's searching examination, became slightly confused.

Witness said he conducted an exclusively wholesale business. Questioned about sugar, he said he had bought from refiners without difficulty until the Guild arrangement came in. This affected him on sugar, though he always got tobaccoes. He is not a member of the Guild.

"What difficulty did you have with sugars ?" counsel asked.

"When the arrangement was made I couldn't get it unless I paid the net price to refiners."

He told of having had an interview with Mr. McNally, secretary-treasurer of the St. Lawrence Co., about the 8th of May, 1901. He told him he wouldn't go in the Guild.

Mr. McNally said to him, "You've worried us enough now. We will give you sugar and not force you to go in the Guild."

Much amusement was caused in the court by the witness' next reply.

The Mark of the Beast.

"What did you say then ?" was the query.

"Asked him if he had ever read the 13th chapter of Revelations."

"What is that ?"

"Well, I can read it to you."

The witness then produced a slip of paper and amid much laughter read the following verse : "And the beast caused all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark on their right hand or in their foreheads, and that no man may buy or sell save he that had the mark or the name of the beast."

"There's nothing to laugh about in my reading them," he said, when the court smiled audibly.

"What did McNally say ?" he was asked.

"McNally said it would be a long time before it came," the witness answered, "but I told him it had come already."

Mr. Robertson said he had been in the business for 40 years, and was turning over about $100,000 a year now.

"Why did you fight so persistently all these years against the Guild ?"

"I thought there was no use in getting tied up. I had made more money before than after the Guild arrangement."

Witness said he had brought sugar in, some from New York, some from Scotland, some from wholesale houses.

The Guild and Some Naughty Travelers

"What is effect of operation of Guild on trade conditions ?" was the next question.

"Very bad."

Why ?"

"Sometimes travelers, about the finest class of men in the country, often have to do things they don't want to do. We lost $300 in giving a man allowances, and also part of his salary to make sales."

"What effect does it have on competition in trade ?"

"It has had the result of increasing wholesale houses and thus increasing competition."

"Does this increase or decrease prices ?"

"It will necessitate larger profits. A young man commencing in the wholesale business would find it very difficult to get any sugar or tobacco unless he was in the Guild."

Turning to the question of business evolution, counsel asked, "What is the tendency of the relation between manufacturer and retailer ?"

"The tendency is to do away with middleman, to allow retailer to get directly at the manufacturer."

Cross-examined by Mr. Johnston, he said the cheapest way to do business would be to do away with the travelers and do business by circular.

"The wholesale system is a very reasonable one ?"

"Yes."

"Who fixes the price of starch, sugar and so forth?"

"The manufacturers in sugar."

"You have no right to dictate to the manufacturers their price, have you?"

"No."

Wanted to Run His Business.

Questioned by Mr. Johnston as to why he did not enter the Guild Mr. Robertson said he couldn't rely on the word of other members and because he wanted to run his own business.

"Would you rather see fewer wholesalers than more to-day?"

"Fewer."

"Why, because you're a wholesaler?"

"Yes."

"You could then make more money?"

"Yes."

Questioned regarding the price movements of sugar during the last few years, Mr. Robertson became rather confused. He told something, however, of the history of tobacco during the last 20 years. Some years ago it could be bought at 22½ cents but the increased duty and cost of manufacture has brought it up to 80 cents. The prices of starch had also increased in the last 20 years.

"Have canned goods gone up in the last 20 years?"

"I couldn't say."

"What about sugar under equalized rates systems? Was the price higher or lower than before?"

"Now the rate is so favorable we can bring sugar to Kingston and store it ourselves. Formerly it was stored in Kingston."

A number of questions from Mr. Robertson's evidence at the former hearing in Hamilton were referred to him and the answers verified.

Re-examined by Mr. Blackstock.

"What has been the effect of the Guild on prices of sugar, starch, vinegar, etc., to the consumer."

"I don't think there is much difference."

The Object of the Guild.

"What do you think is the object of the Guild?"

"I suppose to make a little more money. If goods are higher the consumer has to pay it."

"Do you impute any of the advance on tobacco to these trade arrangements?"

"The Guild gets a little more profit."

"Sugar has gone down. Why?"

"The manufacture of beet sugar and the duty has changed this. The Guild has had no effect on prices."

Another "Outside" Concern.

H. W. Zealand, managing director of the Grocers' Wholesale Co., Limited Hamilton, was then called, and after telling the story of his troubles by reason of the Guild and its various arrangements, was put through a stiff cross-examination by Mr. Johnston.

Witness said he had been connected with the wholesale grocery business since '84 or '85 and was one of the incorporators of the Grocers' Wholesale Co. in 1901. He told the history of the business in relation to the affair.

He applied to Redpath's for sugar in July, 1901. He interviewed Mr. Watson, who said they could not supply them because of the nature of their company. Next he interviewed Sir Wm. McDonald, who spotted a couple of retailers' names and said, "There is your source of supply."

The next trouble came early in 1905 when the starch manufacturers and others cut them off their list. Mr. Hutchison of the St. Lawrence Starch Co., admitted to him that he was willing to leave T. Eaton's name on the list, but his had to come off. He also had trouble with the canners who sold to them through Perkins, Ince.

"The fourth year the canners sold on percentage and gave us the rebate through back door," he said.

He had other trouble with Wm. Clark, Montreal. This firm sold them from 1901 till Feb. 11, 1905. On March 11 he received a letter saying the firm's name had been taken off list. Later Mr. Clark replaced the name on list.

"Was there any reason except non-membership in the guild for this?"

"No. the guild alone was to blame."

Another letter from the St. Lawrence Starch Co. told of similar treatment. "The only way we can sell you is at wholesale prices through some recognized wholesale firm." the letter read.

Another similar letter from Lumsden Bros., "regretted they would be unable to supply them in the regular way."

Another letter was read from the Empire Tobacco Co., stating in reply to an order that they could not fill it unless the firm was a member of the guild.

"Did you have the same experience in other commodities?"

"Yes, in cereals and others."

Guild Spoiled Dividends.

"The guild took away a percentage of profits and spoiled our dividend," the witness explained.

"What is the effect of the influence of guild and its policy on trade generally?" was asked.

"In wholesale business it is hard on new firms. The customers stay with old firms. It takes away competition entirely. An office boy could do two-thirds of the buying. There is no chance to make a bargain when the seller comes along.

"High prices on canned goods work against the poor consumer," the witness said. "He goes without them."

A letter from R. S. S. McIndoe gave orders to the effect that Wm. Clark had instructed them not to fill orders for this firm.

"Did you attempt to get into the guild?" counsel asked.

"Finally it became necessary."

Tried to Join the Guild.

A letter was sent to the secretary in Hamilton and one in reply stated that only strictly wholesale firms were allowed to enter, only on agreement of the Hamilton Guild and the payment of $250. He was advised to apply to the secretary of the local guild.

Another letter from J. Stanley Cook showed that witness' firm objected to the terms, particularly to "unlimited calls," as outlined in the agreement.

"The application form seemed to us to be made for our particular benefit," said the witness, so sent back an application I considered reasonable. There the matter dropped.

Trouble for Crosse & Blackwell.

A couple of letters to the firm from Crosse & Blackwell showed how closely the wholesale trade was sticking together at the time. One dated March 13, written by E. S. Wyatt, from the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, said in part: "After a debate of five hours I am reluctantly compelled to agree to the removal of your company as direct purchasers of our goods. The Price Committee maintain that your company is not doing a legitimate wholesale business."

Another letter from the same source in May 16, 1905, said: "To have retained your name on our lists would have meant that we would lose the business of practically all the wholesale trade in Hamilton and Toronto."

The time for adjournment had by this time arrived.

FRIDAY MORNING'S SESSION.

On the resumption of the hearing on Friday morning Mr. Zealand was put through a searching cross-examination by Mr. Johnston, in an evident effort to prove that the Grocers' Wholesale Co. was not a legitimate wholesale house.

"In organizing the Wholesale Grocers, Limited, was your object to form a combination of retailers for their self-protection?"

"I would not say that. It was an ordinary joint stock company."

Mr. Johnston pointed out that a number of stockholders were retail grocers, and asked what the reason was for the organization of the company.

"The reason was that the retail grocers thought that the guild was making too many restrictions."

"How did you propose to remove the restrictions?"

"By paying seven per cent. dividend on stock and a dividend upon purchases?"

"So that the retailers who were members of the company would practically be placed in the position of getting manufacturers' prices?"

"Provided the profits allowed for distribution."

Suit Against the Guild.

"You have a civil action against the guild, and Mr. Beckett for damages?" queried Mr. Johnston.

"Yes. I started it early in 1905, for damages because Beckett or the guild spoiled our profits by getting the manufacturers to take my name off their lists." answered the witness.

"Why haven't you continued that action?"

"This is a good enough action for me."

"Aha! you would rather use the Crown than a civil action. You prefer the criminal to the civil action."

"I am going on the advice of my solicitor, who is my brother-in-law."

"There was a tariff commission in Hamilton in November, 1905."

"That might be so."

"And you appeared before that commission with a view to lowering the duty on American sugar, and you were opposed by a body of guild members?"

"According to the papers."

"And while they were presenting their case to the commission, you went to the police court and laid information?"

"No, my solicitor was handling the case for me."

"Did you see Mr. Washington?"

"Mr. Washington sent and asked me to see him."

Promoting the Company.

"Prior to your going into this firm in Hamilton you were a traveler for Perkins, Ince & Co., Toronto?"

"Yes."

"And Wm. Brennan and yourself promoted this Hamilton company?"

"Yes."

"You did this while in the employ of another firm and on their time?"

"Yes."

"Do you think this was honest?"

"Yes."

"It was a combination of retailers then, got together for their self protection?"

"It was not a combination, they were a joint stock company."

"You know they are not an ordinary stock company paying dividends on the stock?"

"I'll admit that."

"Every one of your stockholders excepting yourself and another man are retailers?"

"They were at the time the company was formed."

"What was the capital stock of that company?"

"We asked for $100,000. $43,000 was subscribed, and about 75 per cent. of that was paid up."

"How much stock did you subscribe for?"

"For $500. I got $5,000 shares as promoter. Each member got one extra share as a bonus. The members each took $500 in shares."

"Why was the company formed?"

"The retailers thought the guild was making too many restrictions. It was to pay 7 per cent. on capital, and pay a preferred dividend on capital."

"You got goods at the ordinary wholesale price, but the money went back to them in 7 per cent. dividends, and in a share of the profits?"

"Well, yes."

"The man who bought the goods from you was placed exactly on the same basis with the manufacturer's price as the wholesalers?"

"Yes."

Not to Cut Prices.

"Well, it looks as if the institution was formed to let retail grocers get goods at manufacturers' prices?"

"As nearly as possible."

"So that your members would have been able to undersell their opponents in the same town who were not members?"

"Not exactly."

"Will you swear it was not?"

"I will not swear it."

"Did you make any arrangement with any manufacturer to handle his goods exclusively?"

"Not to my knowledge."

"Will you swear that?"

"I certainly will."

"Was there any arrangement to this effect with any manufacturer?"

"No."

"Did you claim this was a combination of retailers?"

"Good point."

"Did you agree to sell manufacturers' goods at their prices?"

"Many times."

"Thought this was all right?"

"Yes."

"The same thing you object to the guild doing?"

"No, the cases are not parallel."

"Members of your company still bought from wholesalers in spite of fact that your prices were the same?"

"Yes, in several cases."

"Why?"

"Because they said we could not buy at the right price as the wholesalers could."

"That is, although they were members of your company they still bought goods from the wicked wholesalers?"

"Yes."

"How many members did you have?"

"About 980 accounts. We had about 67 members. In 1905 we paid a dividend of $589, and in 1905 we paid $593.58."

"Did you penalize these men who bought from the wholesalers?"

"Our men made enquiries, that's all the investigation we did."

Peculiar Representations.

Some circulars sent out by the company at this time were submitted.

"You were sending out circulars at that time that falsely represented your company?"

"They made a wrong statement, not a false one."

"If you were acting as purchasing agents you would not be wholesalers?"

"No."

"We are entitled to take the statements in your literature as an evidence of what you are doing?"

"Yes."

A number of letters sent out by witness as manager of the company, explaining the methods of organization of the business were read.

"In referring to the fact that members were buying from other firms you spoke of handsome dividends that could be realized by adhering to the agreement?"

"The company found members yielding to baits offered by travelers of other wholesale houses and we wanted to keep them with us."

Another letter made the statement that the company gave the retailers goods directly from the manufacturers.

"Is that correct?"

"No, it is not true."

"So you published false statements to your shareholders in 1901, 1902 and 1903," commented the lawyer.

The Grocer Figures Again.

At this point the fyles of The Canadian Grocer for 1903 were made use of by Mr. Johnston and attention called to a number of advertisements in different issues of the paper during the Spring months.

"You advertised very considerably in The Canadian Grocer in 1903?"

"Yes; we had an ad. running for some time in that paper."

From an advertisement in the issue of May 16 Mr. Johnston read:

"Trusts are entirely foreign to this country. . . . Who is going to rule, 'the ring' or the people? Let the retailer become his own wholesaler."

"I don't see how that could be done," said Mr. Zealand.

"Still, you looked after the advertising?"

"Yes."

Another advertisement says, "The Grocers' Wholesale, Limited, is the shortest way from the manufacturer to the retailer."

In some of the advertisements a cartoon appeared showing a cow presumably being milked by trusts with the consumers in the background saying:—"That's my cow." And underneath was this motto:—

"What are you doing, my pretty maid?
'I'm doing the public, sir,' she said."

Referring to one of the statements made in the advertisements Mr. Johnston asked:

"Didn't you sell at wholesale grocers' prices?"

"Yes."

"So you were in the same position as the guild member dealing with reduction to the wholesale buyer?"

"Yes, with the exception of sugar or tobacco."

"So the retailer paid you the same prices as he would to any other?"

"Yes."

"And your path, then, was no shorter than that of the wholesalers'?"

"It was the same."

"And you would not have complained had the manufacturer sold to you at the same prices as he sold to the guild?"

"No."

"Are the profits you make excessive?"

"I'll never complain about them being that."

"And the wholesale grocers' profits were not large?"

"No."

"So what they did was to go to the manufacturer and say, if you allow us a larger profit we will buy from you and no one else?"

"I can't always speak as to that."

Departmental Store System.

Mr. Johnston then spoke of the departmental stores who, by buying in large lots from the manufacturer can sell cheaper than the retailer.

"They usually make up for the cut prices in another way," the witness said.

"There is a glaring example of a sale in jam jars, but of that we will hear more later," said the lawyer, who also referred to how the mail order business hurts the country stores.

Peculiar Business Morality.

Then followed rather a remarkable piece of evidence. The witness said that ultimately he tried to become a member of the guild.

"Was it because it was honest, or because it was dishonest, that you wanted to join?"

"I didn't know anything about it except that it was composed of a lot of honorable gentlemen."

"It was sometimes necessary to do wrong to protect your business?" asked Mr. Johnston, referring to the agreements mentioned above.

"Perhaps so."

"Is that your morality? Would you do wrong to protect your business?"

"If it was a question of protecting my business I would look after it."

"Then your moral perception is governed by dollars and cents?"

"I would say so. Yes."

"Well, that is perfectly frank."

Mr. Blackstock, re-examining, questioned:

"Who is there in all this who is looking after the public?"

"I object to that question," said Mr.

Johnston. "The public can look after itself; it usually does if left alone."

"Well, if you'll admit that I have no more to say," said the Crown counsel.

This, Mr. Blackstock intimated, closed the Crown's case.

Hugh Blain, of Eby-Blain, Toronto, was called as the first witness for the defence.

Examined by Mr. Johnston, Mr. Blain said he had been in the business since 1865.

"What is your property worth for retail grocery purposes?"

"It is only suitable for wholesale purposes. Wholesale houses are not usually in the retail district."

"What was the condition of trade prior to the formation of the Guild?"

"Very unsatisfactory, because some goods were sold at cost. Some of them yielded practically no profit."

The first agitation for terms with the manufacturers was made about 1883-4. At that time there was a small margin of profit on these articles. Often nothing was left and profits did not pay for the risks run.

"How did arrangements begin?"

The First Arrangement—1c

"In 1882, if I remember right, Col. Davidson and myself went to Montreal with the view of discussing the situation in the trade, and we succeeded in making an arrangement with other wholesale grocers to sell tobacco at an advance of two cents per pound."

"Who paid the two cents?"

"They came from the retail trade, whose margin of profit at that time was pretty large."

"Do you know whether there was any increase to the consumer?"

"I do not think it made any difference to the consumer."

Mr. Blain told something of wholesale business methods, how it required large and detail machinery involving complicated internal arrangements, shippers, clerks, travelers, selling agents, and a large amount of capital.

"We had to keep careful watch of all accounts," he said. "At that time we extended long credits and carried many retailers. We also suffered losses from time to time."

Questioned as to what would be a fair amount of profit on ordinary wholesale business, he said, "Between 2 and 3 per cent. net on his turnover, and gross over 10 per cent. You could make a good profit on this percentage on a large turnover."

The Next Move—1c

"The next move was a reduction in time terms. Sugar had been sold on a four months' basis. This was reduced to 60 days, and other articles to three months."

"Was there any organization at this time?"

"Partially so, Mr. Ince was president. Col. Davidson and W. H. Gillard were also in it, though the latter was not particularly active at the time."

"Our first proposition to the manufacturers was that we get ⅛ cent a pound on sugar. Our travelers always kept the prices on the staple articles as close as they could so as to sell other goods."

"How long had you been struggling to get better prices and terms with the manufacturers?"

"We have been struggling all our lives, and are struggling yet."

"As a result of the interview with refiners we did not succeed for a long time. They admitted business was done on an unreasonable margin, but they were slow in acceding to the proposals. We had been trying to get this for three or four years."

Reducing Time Terms.

"The next move," Mr. Blain said, "was to further reduce the time term, sugar to 30 days, other goods gradually coming to the same basis."

"Was there any difference between you and the manufacturer?"

"Not till the last nine or ten years. The last change in sugar was made when the equalized rates were established in 1898."

"What is the principle of that system?"

"The principle is that every wholesale house should be able to sell to the retail merchant goods that would cost him exactly the same, no matter from whom he bought."

"Freight rates and all?"

A Fair Arrangement.

"Yes."

"Do you think the equalized rates system is a fair arrangement, giving to the dealers and retailers equal benefits?"

"It is intended to be beneficial and fair, and I believe it is."

"Was it prepared with the view of discriminating against anybody?"

"Certainly not."

"By whom was it prepared?"

"By Mr. Beckett."

"When the guild was organized what was the condition of things in the wholesale trade in regard to cutting prices?"

"We had no means of doing anything."

"Were prices being cut to the detriment of the trade?"

"Yes."

The evils of the time were that some lines were being sold at lower than reasonable profits and that business methods were not satisfactory. There was great trouble, too, from wholesalers selling to consumers through the grange organization.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON SESSION.

At the afternoon session the examination of Mr. Blain was continued.

"At this time Jas. Lumbers took up the matter of supplying the grange and led to a good deal of trouble," he said.

"At this time wholesalers were not making a living profit out of the goods referred to?"

"No."

The witness with others visited some of the refiners at the time. They claimed that their own profits were so small that they couldn't give any favors.

In answer to a question Mr. Blain said the wholesalers had nothing to do with fixing prices. They simply wanted more profits. The wholesalers never disputed the right of the manufacturer to sell to the retail trade so long as they did not sell below retail prices.

"If these staple goods were sold to retailers at the same terms as to the wholesale trade what would be the ultimate result?"

"They would be put out of business."

"Was there any attempt to coerce the refiners in regard to the question of price?"

"Never."

"The main question was one of profit?"

"Yes, and the only one."

Got a Margin of Profit.

"Eventually you got a margin of profit from the manufacturers?"

"Yes, but not so much as we think we were entitled to."

"Did that affect the price to the retailer?"

"I do not think so. I know of no case where it did."

"Did it make any difference in the price to the consumer?"

"I don't think so."

"Could it make any difference under the existing state of affairs?"

"Practically, no."

Object of Forming the Guild.

"What was the object of forming the constitution of the guild?"

"To have a proper system of looking after our business, to have it properly organized, as every institution should have by-laws to govern it."

"And the condition of membership was what?"

"That a member must be a wholesale grocer."

"Was there ever any refusal by the guild to admit a man who was a wholesale grocer?"

"Not to my knowledge."

"Who made out the list of direct buyers?"

"Each manufacturer made out his own list."

"Had the guild any final say as to who should be on that list?"

"No, but we had the right to represent who should or should not be."

"Are there several wholesale houses who are not in the guild, but who are on the direct buyers' list?"

"Yes."

"And you had no objection to that?"

"None whatever."

"Did the guild know that the manufacturers were selling to retailers not on the list?"

"In some cases, yes. If a manufacturer was found doing so we made representations."

"Were any threats made to manufacturers?"

"Only in some cases that we might not sell his goods."

"The Canadian Wholesale Grocers Co., of Hamilton, what objection was there to them belonging to the guild?"

"Because they were merely an aggregation of retailers banded together to buy at wholesale prices."

"Presuming that one of these concerns started up in every trade centre in the Province, what would be the effect upon the wholesalers?"

"Very serious."

"In what way?"

"It would force every wholesaler out of business."

"Was it the intention that your profit should come from the consumer?"

"No, since we are the cheapest method of doing this business. The profit we made came from the machinery needed to carry goods from the manufacturer to the consumer. If the wholesale system was cut out goods would undoubtedly cost more than they do now."

"The guild never made any arrangements to prevent any one going into the guild except the provision that he give up his retail business as Mr. Kinnear, of T. Kinnear & Co., Toronto, did."

"Do you know of any case in which a member violating the rules was penalized?"

"It was not a frequent occurrence."

Mr. Blain said he believed the wholesale business to be the cheapest method of handling the commodities under discussion.

"Is there anything in your arrangements with the manufacturers of sugar, tobacco, cereals, etc., which would unduly prevent or limit the sale of these articles?"

"Nothing whatever."

Questioned by Mr. Blackstock, Mr. Blain said that though not an officer, he has borne an active part in the arrangements of the guild. Perhaps there was none more active.

"Is it true that you, with others, have formed what is popularly called a combine?"

"I don't think it could be called that."

"So far as the evidence has gone, have you seen any evidence of a so-called combine?"

"No, I have not."

"These arrangements with the manufacturers, whether for good or for bad, have a far reaching effect upon the people?"

"No, only particular classes?"

"The object of your arrangements was to dislocate and interfere with the state of things you found before you made them?"

"I don't think a thing already disjointed can be dislocated," was the retort.

"Was the retail grocery trade in a satisfactory condition at this time?"

"Neither the retail nor the wholesale grocery trade have, to my mind, ever got out of the businesses what they put into them."

"It was impossible for you to look for any improvement in the price of the manufacturer?"

"Yes."

"And you couldn't make any money out of the retailer at that time?"

"We didn't want to."

Improved Profits of Retailers.

"Did you succeed in improving the profits of the wholesale trade?"

"I think we did."

"And you were not concerned with the profit of the retailers?"

"Oh, I think so. If he doesn't make a good profit he will not be a good customer."

Referring again to the equalized rates system Mr. Blackstock asked:

"Is it not part of this that sugar should be sold at the same price to every wholesaler?"

"Not at all. Wholesalers are on an equal footing only so far as selling the goods is concerned.

"The retailer is greatly interested in the price at which he can get the commodity from the manufacturer?"

"He is."

"If the retailer had access to the manufacturer or refiner, would he not beat him down in price if he could?"

"As an isolated transaction, that's right."

"And as he can't get at them, the cut is eliminated."

"Yes."

"Was your business in a starved and unsatisfactory condition?"

"We were getting thin, and are having a hard time yet."

A Different Case.

Mr. Blackstock then read an extract from a prospectus of Eby, Blain & Co., saying the purposes and objects were "to secure the co-operation of retail merchants in fostering a community of interests between the wholesale and retail trade, and to place stock chiefly with the retail trade."

"You, as a member of the Guild, did not think yourself disqualified by this?"

"Not at all."

"But you thought Mr. Zealand was by handling stock to retailers?"

"His arrangements were upon an entirely different basis."

"Part of your arrangement was that you would not import foreign sugars?"

"Yes."

"Under the agreement if it were strictly kept you and your associates were the only ones handling Canadian refined sugars?"

"Practically, yes, though there were several exceptions."

Competing Points.

Speaking of wholesale and railway competing points, Mr. Blain said: — "There is a difference, though these occur at the same places. The former are where wholesale houses are established and where goods are shipped from, such as Toronto, Hamilton, Collingwood. Points like Acton, Brampton, etc., are not."

Determining Competition.

"What determines the amount of competition in commercial business?"

"Demand; competition increases with that."

"Before the sugar agreement the small jobbers could buy large quantities of sugar and sell at a price ruinous to other retailers."

"Yes, the manufacturer in most cases has a fixed price to his goods."

Mr. Blain said that the object of the formation of the guild was to protect Canadian industries, and every step made was taken with that end in view.

"Supposing you imported refined sugar?"

"It would have been dishonorable."

"And further?"

"If we imported the goods we lost the rebate."

"That was the lever used?"

"Yes."

"And what else?"

"We were brought into competition with the refiners."

Charles Corley, of the Wholesale Brokerage and Commission Co., formerly the Pacific Selling Co., East Orange, N. J., dealers in Pacific coast products, canned salmon, etc., was examined by Mr. Johnston.

"What has been your methods as to distribution of goods?"

"We reach consumers through the wholesale grocer."

"Has it been your policy to fix a selling price?"

"Yes, on some lines."

"On Clover Leaf salmon?"

"Yes."

"Previous to the Guild arrangement?"

"Yes, sir."

During his testimony yesterday Mr. Zealand said that Mr. Corby had refused to sell him goods. Mr. Corby explained this by saying that his company distributed their goods wholly through legitimate wholesale houses.

"What about a jobber with a retail counter?"

"If he were a jobber and recognized as such, I would sell to him. We have jobbers in the United States with retail stores."

He has some fixed prices in the United States, set by the firm. Not by any combine.

Witness said he wouldn't deal with Wholesale Groceries Co., of Hamilton, as he understands this firm by report to be not strictly wholesale.

"Has it been your policy to fix a selling price at which the goods reach the consumer?"

"On some articles."

"Was it on Clover Leaf salmon, the goods mentioned here?"

"It was."

Cross-examined by Mr. Blackstock:

Not Dictated to by Guild—lc

"Did you decline to sell to the Hamilton firm merely in obedience to the dictates of the Guild?"

"Not at all."

"Did not the Guild raise trouble over selling to this company?"

"Not to my knowledge."

"You know they made their objection to your agent?"

"I possibly do."

"If the man has the money and comes to you for a large order would you sell to him if the wholesalers didn't object?"

"I wouldn't if he were a retailer."

"Why, because you're afraid of the wholesaler?"

"Yes. You can't do two kinds of business."

"You have prices fixed every year?"

"Yes."

"All the wholesalers get your goods at the same price?"

"Yes."

"Then everything is rigid and fixed till we get to consumer?"

"Yes."

Questioned again by Mr. Johnston:

"What settles prices among retailers and consumers?"

"Supply and demand, I suppose."

"What do you mean by being afraid of the wholesaler?"

"Anyone in our business must keep the good-will of the wholesaler."

This ended the examination, and according to the announcement made on Thursday, the hearing was adjourned, to be resumed on Tuesday, November 10th, at 11 a.m.

FRENCH SARDINE PACK SHORT.

The French sardine catch is over, according to cables received in New York this week from Paris and Bordeaux, and the packers find themselves with even less goods packed than a year ago and virtually no surplus available. None of them will take orders and most of them have been forced into making pro rata deliveries. In many factories the fish were absorbed as fast as packed.

Milk Condensing, Story of Great Industry

The Life and Struggles of Gail Borden, the Pioneer of the Condensed Milk Business—How the Industry Has Developed—A Description of the Recently Opened Borden Factory at Tilsonburg, Ontario, the Finest on the Continent.

"There is nothing new under the sun."

One so often hears and reads of this trite expression and when instances are given based on historic records such as that gunpowder, claimed as the invention of the French monk, Schwartz, was known to the Chinese a thousand years before the birth of Christ, or that the ancient Egyptians had knowledge of the manufacture of paper, one is apt to fall into the belief that "there is nothing new under the sun" in our day of advanced civilization. We pride ourselves on the inventions of the telegraph, the telephone, talking machines, steam and electricity and a thousand and one other useful and indispensable appliances and the names of the great discoveries and appliers of the forces of nature. Watt, Stevenson, Morse, Edison and Bell are carved indelibly in the world's history of great achievements. To Jenner, Pasteur and Koch the world owes much and mankind for ages to come will ever remain in their debt. One might enumerate a score of fields in which the genius of man has left the marks of his thought and endeavor for the benefit of his fellowmen. It is, however, the writer's intention to draw the attention of the readers of The Canadian Grocer, briefly, and as succintly as possible, to the achievements of one of the greatest benefactors of this or any other age; namely, Gail Borden, the undoubted and indisputable originator of condensed milk, and it is no random statement on our part to say that "he stands first among the educators of the world for actual work accomplished in the preservation and condensation, in portable form, of the most perishable and necessary food product."

The Inventor of Condensed Milk.

By grocers and purveyors of food products the name of Gail Borden should be especially reverenced and as the true grocer should keep himself posted on all his goods and thoroughly understand what he dispenses to his customers this brief sketch of Gail Borden and the great work and industry he founded and which is continued on such a magnificent scale by his present successors will be of interest.

Gail Borden was born in New York State in 1801. From that time to 1827, when he appeared at Galveston, Texas, as one of the hardy pioneers driving out the notorious Jean Lafitte and his band of pirates from the Gulf Port, his struggles were those of every sturdy son of the early years of the nineteenth century. He was a surveyor and his honesty and resourcefulness in the discharge of his duties in Indiana, Kentucky and Mississippi brought him into high official positions in the State, and for his services in the struggle, which drove out Mexican rule, put Santa Anna to rout at the victory of San Jacinto and established the Republic of Texas. He was appointed the first collector of the Port of Galveston by President Houston. He surveyed and laid out that city.

Qualities Which Won.

Honesty and resourcefulness were common qualities among the bold and hardy frontiersmen, who repelled the Mexican invaders. Borden had, in addition, uncommon qualities the height of Yankee inventiveness, backed up by the bull-dog determination shown in his rugged features and strict religion, and all this patient ingenuity was constantly exerted in furtherance of his ambition to be a humanitarian, a benefactor, a bequeather to unborn generations of some blessing incalculable in value.

Half-starved at times, the young surveyor on his long and lonely journeys over the desolate plains of the Southwest felt the need of some wholesome food which could be preserved in compact and portable form. His first crude attempt in this direction was a "meat biscuit," the juice of beef combined with bread. He embarked his entire capital in its manufacture and it is this meat biscuit that took the highest award at the first world's exhibition at London in 1851.

In 1852 Gail Borden was elected an honorary member of the London Society of Arts. As a commercial venture, however, the "meat biscuit" was not a success, it having appeared too early to be accepted as an article of general consumption. In 1853 he returned to New York. Some four years previous to this he had concentrated his energies in attempts to condense milk. Like all inventors of radically new things, he was laughed at by skeptics and eminent scientists combatted the possibility of preserving the butter fat in its natural condition. His prophetic vision, however, must have seen a glorious future for the child of his brain, for in spite of almost insurmountable obstacles, lack of capital, failure of experiments, ridicule of friends, losses by fire of his plants, discouragements from the U.S. patent offices on the plea that his application "lacked the essential requisites of novelty and usefulness," even to the mortgaging of a portion of his prospects, he was finally, on August 19, 1856, granted Patent No. 15553 for "Producing Concentrated Sweet Milk by Evaporation in Vacuo."

Rival claimants to priority of the invention were promptly in the field and the London Saturday Review claimed that Borden had robbed English army officers of the patent. It was finally conceded that Borden's claim was just and the Encyclopaedia Brittanica on condensed milk states:

An Early Description.

"The credit of originating the industry is due to Mr. Gail Borden, of White Plains, N.Y. In 1851 he introduced his plain condensed milk, which is simply milk from which three-fourths and four-fifths of the water has been removed, and in 1861 he rendered important services to the army in the field by supplying a preserved milk which was in effect milk, similarly concentrated with a proportion of sugar added and hermetically sealed in tin cans."

From this time on (1861) prospects became brighter, and although many disappointments had yet to be overcome, his indomitable energy, pluck, enthusiasm and honesty triumphed, until in 1874 when, with success assured, he left the conductors of his enterprise a heritage far more precious than the right to his invention—the inspiration of his fine personality and scrupulously honest life.

Above all he left them a humanitarian industry—a business which, as carried out in the highest plane, confers an immense specific benefit upon mankind, from the delicate child in its mother's arms to the exhausted soldier in the wilderness.

Something About the Company.

So much for the humanitarian and undiscouraged inventor. A brief sketch of the great Borden's Condensed Milk Company will be of interest to all Canadian grocers, particularly that there are now two factories in operation in Canada.

The company own and operate 145 factories in the United States, located from Maine to California.

A New Canadian Plant.

The Canadian Grocer, through the courtesy of Wm. H. Dunn, the company's Ontario, Quebec and Maritime Provinces' representative, was a privileged guest of president Wm. J. Rogers, at the opening of the new plant at Tillsonburg, Ont., on October 2nd last. The knowledge possessed by The Grocer of the magnitude of the Borden's Condensed Milk Co., and the process of manufacture of "Eagle Brand" condensed milk and "Peerless Brand" evaporated cream, was superficial and the opportunity of witnessing the manufacture of such an indispensable grocery staple was one not to be lost. To say that what he saw was a revelation is putting it extremely mild. It was an object lesson in the application of hygienic principles and modern scientific methods in the production in concentrated and portable form of one of man's essential foods.

To describe accurately the wonderful processes of manufacture of condensed milk and evaporated cream is beyond the writer's abilities, and it is not the purport of this article to go into scientific details, but rather to indicate to our readers a few of the very important matters that have placed Borden's brands in the very forefront of the world's milk products.

The primary principle of the founder and the policy of the present company's heads is "the minute and absolute control of the dairyman's milk." The dazzling spotlessness of their factories, the most perfect scientific machinery employed and the strictest hygienic condition of every employe, the spirit of cleanliness, accuracy and thoroughness is a fetish with every one connected with the industry from the president down to the humblest employe, and the harsh but expressive word "cranks" on these matters is the only one thoroughly appropriate. The result of all this is "perfection, purity, safety and healthfulness" in the product.

An Interior View of the New Borden Factory at Tillsonburg.

The Most Perfect on the Continent.

The Tillsonburg factory is undoubtedly the most perfect milk condensing factory on the American continent, as in its construction every tried and modern principle of location, sanitation, hygiene and skill has been employed. It is located just outside of the town in a beautiful valley with pure, clear spring water in abundance. The building itself is of pure white pressed brick with as much light as is possible to allow, ventilation is perfect and clear, clean and sweet. The photos shown in this article will give the reader an idea of the exterior and interior of the plant, but no description can bear the impression on his mind that an inspection of the actual plant does.

The Primary Processes.

The approaches to the building are graded to the receiving house, where the milk cans are brought, weighed and the contents passed into the receiving tanks. After the cans are emptied they are scrupulously cleaned before being returned to the farmer. This cleaning process is not left to the farmer himself, but is attended to by the employes and the farmer given definite instructions in the process and the theory and practice of cleanliness impressed upon him. As an educational feature this system is of great benefit, not only to the milk producer, but also to the company and ultimately is a security to the consumer.

After the milk tanks are filled the fluid is passed through pipes into the sterlizing and heating vessels and when the proper temperature is reached put into milk cans which are placed into long basins of running water where on revolving tables they are turned and the milk automatically stirred until the proper temperature for the large condenser is arrived at. This condenser is located on the second floor and is a marvel of construction and accurate work.

Entirely Mechanical Process.

After the condensing process is finished the milk is conveyed in pipes to the filling machines which work automatically. Throughout the entire process, from the reception of the milk at the receiving station to the time it is packed into the tins, there is not the slightest opportunity for the milk to come into contact with the hands thus ensuring cleanliness from start to finish.

The large second floor is undivided by partitions and is used for a storage department. Shipping facilities are provided at the rear of the building where railway sidings run along the entire building and loading is promptly and conveniently arranged.

A Banquet to the Visitors.

At the opening of the plant President Rogers invited the Mayor, Councilors and prominent business men of the town and vicinity to an inspection of the plant and the operation of the condensing process. Vice-president S. F. Taylor and Frank Rogers, superintendent of Borden's factories as well as President Rogers, explained the operations to the guests. Later Mr. Rogers entertained his guests at a banquet at the Arlington Hotel, to which about twenty-five guests sat down. The after-dinner remarks of the leading speakers President Rogers, Vice-President Taylor, Superintendent Frank Rogers and other members of the producing and selling force of the Borden Condensed Milk Co., Mr. Twining and Mr. Hutt, of the Ingersoll plant, gave the guests instructive and valuable news of this great industry. W. H. Dunn, Montreal, selling agent, to whose energetic work and enthusiasm for "Eagle," "Peerless" and "Gold Seal" brands, much of the increase in sales in Canada is due, also spoke of the remarkable demand for condensed milk in Canada. From sales of a few hundred cases a year some six years ago, the business in his territory alone had grown to one of over a full carload every week in the year. It was easy for Mr. Dunn, as he expressed it, to put enthusiasm into the sale of Borden's brands, as the perfect manner in which the goods were manufactured and the correct straightforward and honest treatment of the trade, made every employe thoroughly loyal and enthusiastic.

A Grocer Who Has Risen.

It may be mentioned that President Rogers started in life as a clerk in a grocery store in New York City and it is thus appropriate that his life-work should find him at the head of one of the leading grocery staples of the world. Space will not permit of a sketch of his career, itself an interesting study of what can be accomplished by energy, thrift, business acumen and pluck, but The Grocer will, in a future issue, take pleasure in presenting to its readers a full account of his career. We cannot know too much of the principles that have made men great in our own business.

KINGSTON CORRESPONDENCE.

October 30.—The squirrels are laying in their Winter store of hickory nuts. They are wise. The merchants are also on the Q.V., and the sidewalks are piled up with canned goods, corn, peas and tomatoes being most prominent. What they will retail for yet is not known. Big Jim the grocer will likely let us know in his space in the paper and it is a good way for the rest generally to follow.

Saturday's market was larger than the largest this year and everything brought big prices. The outlook for Winter trade is good but there are a lot of people looking around for some grocer to feed them all Winter and many a poor grocer will get stung.

John Randolph has again assumed control of the Hotel Randolph. This will be good news for the knights of the grip, for there is no more genial hotel man in Canada than John.

Roy Gibson has returned from a two months' visit to the Northwest and feels that Ontario is good enough for him. He will work and learn the grocery business in his father's store, corner Princess and King Streets.

We watch with interest the proceedings of the court in the grocers' combine cases. Kingston is interested. Will it be a fine or how will it turn out?

Business is kind of flat. Some blame the elections. People seem to be living on politics. Cold weather is a good tonic. People wear more clothes and get their appetites sharpened.

The students had a big time hazing. New men were mauled till their own friends didn't know them. One poor fellow ran past our store with his face all "2 in 1" and his boots off. Everybody laughed, of course, until he disappeared in his boarding house.

Are there any more jelly powders going to be made? I heard a grocer say he had ten kinds now, but he was going to get rid of all but two, and I think he is wise. There are too many kinds of everything now-a-days hence so much goods that are shopworn, dirty and off-flavor. I cleaned out a lot of 1-lb. tins of baking powder to a man last week. He said he had a lot of baking to do as he was going to have a bee to raise his barn.

Can't get a good apple. Never saw such culls. The bags and barrels show good samples on top but lower down they are small and shapeless. If a man alters a $1 bill and makes it a $10 he is sent to jail. I don't see why a man cheating by putting large fruit on top shouldn't be punished also. It is a swindle sure.

DEATH OF HALIFAX FINANCIER.

Thomas E. Kenny, President of Acadia Sugar Refinery, Passed Away on Monday.

Thomas E. Kenny, President of the Acadia Sugar Refinery, and also of the Royal Bank of Canada, died rather suddenly in Halifax on Monday morning, Oct. 26. Mr. Kenny was a prominent figure in business circles in the Maritime Provinces and was also familiarly known in Montreal. The funeral took place on Wednesday, October 28.

TRADE NOTES.

Elliott & Lambert, Mildmay, Ont., are disposing of a $4,000 general store stock and $200 of fixtures. The firm had a $15,000 turn-over last year but are going out of business for private reasons.

A fine new grocery has just been opened in Uxbridge by P. Shier & Co. in the block formerly occupied by H. H. Bishop. The premises have been thoroughly remodelled and a flour and feed and seed department will be run in connection with the grocery.

SOME INTERESTING CATALOGUES

A new catalogue has just been issued by the Walker Bin and Store Fixture Co., of Berlin, which is gotten up in such a way as to be interesting to every grocer. The little book is called "Modern Grocery Fixtures," and is the third issue of a similar nature. The earlier pages are occupied with sketches of suggested bins, shelving, doorways and other store outfits. Following these are a number of photographs showing the interiors of some of the latest stores supplied with fixtures. The catalogue is very attractively gotten up and will prove interesting to any grocer. It will be sent from the company on mention of the name of this paper.

Another bright little catalogue which came to hand this week is one from the Onward Manufacturing Co., of Berlin, showing an attractive line of cash registers, manufactured by the Michigan Register Co., at Detroit. The booklet illustrates various machines for different purposes and explains the details quite comprehensively. A copy of this will be forwarded to any grocer interested by application to the Onward Mfg. Co., and mentioning the Canadian Grocer.

UPS AND DOWNS IN SUGAR.

The past week has seen some rather interesting fluctuations in the sugar market. Last week's market reports noted a firm and advancing raw market with a possibility of an advance shortly. European beets had been climbing in jumps for some time, having gone forward fully a shilling in the last month. Reports of unfavorable weather for the crop added another touch to this at the middle of the week and in the face of this the Redpath interests advanced ten points on Friday.

Official notice of an advance by all refiners came from the Dominion Exchange shortly afterward, but the St. Lawrence Co. continued to accept business at the old prices.

At the first of the week cables from Europe reported a decline of 3d. in the beet market, with the situation generally easier. On receipt of this the refiners declined ten points on Tuesday, so that quotations this week are the same as before last Friday's advance.

At the present time the raw markets are steady, though fairly easy under good deliveries. There is no immediate prospect of another change in refined.

TURKEYS ENOUGH FOR THANKSGIVING.

We may safely prepare to give thanks without hesitancy. Dealers in various parts of the country report that the supply of Thanksgiving turkeys will be quite adequate.

What a relief for the hungry head of a family who has been looking forward to tucking the substance of a plump drumstick under his waistcoat on Monday week.

While the supply promises to be adequate, it will not be much above the requirements. Farmers are a little behindhand with their turkeys this year, and the greater portion of the crop is as yet pretty light. The real harvest wil come along well in time for Christmas, when business promises to be very brisk.

Last year the turkey season opened with prices on a very stiff basis, and shortly afterward the decline was somewhat marked. This year opening prices are rather more reasonable and dealers state that if there is any change it will be in the form of a slight advance.

CANADIAN CRANBERRIES IN DEMAND.

This year, and particularly the last week or so, is seeing a better demand for Canadian cranberries than fruit-dealers have heretofore known.

In previous years the Cape Cod berries have furnished practically all the business. This year the Nova Scotia berry, which is coming into the markets in better condition and better packed than formerly, is commanding a good deal of attention.

Just at present the Cape Cod dealers are holding their berries and prices on Canadian markets are firm at $10 to $12 a barrel. Against this the Nova Scotia berries, which compare very favorably are offered at $8 per barrel, and are selling quite freely. Some Ontario berries, too, are on the market, though not in large quantities.

The Grocer has questioned frequently why our markets should not be supplied with our own cranberries, and indications that such is coming to be the case are gratifying indeed.

THE SITUATION IN THE WEST.

The Western Viewpoint by our special correspondent.

Winnipeg, Oct. 27.—The situation in wheat has changed very little for the entire week. The market has never been a very rapid one but it had been steady and held remarkably strong all week. The forward movement has averaged rather more than 400 cars daily for the week and this increasing movement has very naturally lessened the premiums that are paid on spot wheat. On Saturday morning 1c was paid on spot No. 1 Northern but later in the same session a large quantity of spot wheat was applied on the option. During the latter part of the week there has been little or no demand for No. 2 and No. 3 cash wheat but there has been fair trading in November.

The Grain Exchange is practically the only place in the city where it is possible to escape the discussion of politics and inside the sacred precincts of the trading rooms you never hear them mentioned. Probably by this time next week the majority of politicians will have ceased even to explain how it happened which will be a relief to people who while taking an intelligent interest in the questions of the day have no use for party politics. The excitement seems to be confined largely to the centres, the farmers being busy hauling grain or ploughing. The weather has been admirable for the latter work and it has been pushed with vigor all through the month of October and not only has a large amount been accomplished but the work has been particularly well done and should insure an excellent seed bed for next spring.

The cattle market is pretty dull, receipts of second rate butchers being very much in excess of demand. Receipts of all classes of stuff are large and by the end of the season it will not be possible for any man to complain that he could not get his stuff out for lack of cars. The hog situation is much the same as the cattle. Farmers are shipping in a great lot of underweight hogs that the packers have no use for. There is absolutely no excuse for this for feed is abundant and the weather could not have been better for the finishing of hogs than it has been for the past two months. There has been such an excess of thin hogs that the market has broken a full cent. There has been no slackening of demand for good bacon hogs; indeed, the packers are receiving far less than their requirements but the forcing of so much undesirable stuff on the market could have but one effect.

The Dominion Live Stock Commissioner for the West is making arrangements with a number of farmers to feed bunches of steers under Government direction this winter. There is an increased tendency to go into winter feeding, but it is not being done to the extent it should be as witness the thin, half-grown stuff that is being offered for sale.

The Dominion Department of Agriculture hope by offering certain inducements, to secure a number of farmers who will take up this work of demonstrating how easily and profitably cattle can be finished in the open in the Canadian West during the winter and thus use up the coarse grains and ship them out in the most concentrated form, viz., that of good fat beef.—H.

QUEBEC MARKETS

Montreal, October 29, 1908.

Beans—Easier.
Butter—Advanced.
Sugar—Firm.
Cheese—Slight advance.
Eggs—Advanced.

Now that the elections have been relegated to the past, business men are looking for a general improvement of conditions. During the week trade has been only fair and in most quarters this is in a measure attributed to the attention which has been bestowed upon political matters. Whilst the interest evinced in the large centres has been decidedly apathetic the country districts have been quite the reverse and it has been in these quarters that trade has been most affected. A prominent business man of this city stated that it was his opinion that the pendulum would commence to swing towards prosperity with an increased impetus after the American elections. If this city is any criterion it has commenced to swing in that direction already.

The decline in rolled oats is perhaps the most important change in quotations this week. This change was intimated in last week's report, but then all dealers had not swung into line as they have now. There is a better demand for Canadian apples coming from England, with an advance in prices, and prospects are good for a further advance.

Locally the tea market has not altered during the week, all grades being somewhat dull. Reports from Japan state that no more suitable tea is obtainable there for export. Sugar remains quiet and prices are maintained. It is thought that if the prices of raw continue to go up an advance in refined may be expected. Molasses and syrups are dull, comparatively little trade passing in these lines.

A good business is being done in fish lines, which is due to their seasonableness and favorable prices. Other lines have not been disturbed during the week.

SUGAR—There is a strong tone to the sugar market, and it is said if the price of raws continues to advance, refined grades will soon have to go forward. Considerable Scotch sugar is coming into the country. Demand is not brisk.

TEA—Reports from Japan state that there is no more tea available there for export. Locally trade in this line is very dull. Blacks are preserving a dull attitude as has characterized them for some time past. Advices from India state that supplies have been considerably heavier than in the corresponding month of 1907 and as almost always happens with increased quantity, the quality has shown some falling off. This is most apparent in Assam growths and Darjeelings, both of which have lost some of the stand-out character which they had a month ago. There is not much change to notice in Cachar, Sylhet, or Chittagong teas, but it is satisfactory to be able to report that the arrivals from Dooars have improved, and are at present useful in character. Prices of common grades advanced in the earlier sales of the month, but with heavier supplies week after week, they dropped back to their former values and closed without any change to report. As regards finer sorts, it is more difficult to speak correctly. The selling prices of certain well known marks have dropped 1d. to 2d. per lb. on the month, but when quality is also considered it is seen that very little actual change has taken place. The tendency on the whole is easier, but after such a period of keen competition for choice lots as was noticeable at the end of August some slacking off was inevitable. A Calcutta cable states that the supply is overtaking last year's figures after a time of apprehended shortage. The offerings in public sale in September were 191,300 packages, against 174,974 in 1907.

DRIED FRUITS—The Valencia market is quiet and the tendency is for easier prices. Malagas are not displaying any unusual tendencies, only moving slowly. Sultanas have been active and stocks are fairly well cleaned up. Figs are being well bought up as they arrive. The warm weather, it is thought, has somewhat checked the demand for currants, which will be more active when cooler weather arrives. It is stated that practically all the cargo of the Tabristan, due to arrive in New York soon with new dates, has been sold since the announcement of prices.

MANITOBA MARKETS

(Market quotations corrected by telegraph up to 9 a.m. Thursday, October 29, 1908.)

Business continues to show a steady improvement in practically all lines. Money is circulating more freely and the outlook is particularly hopeful. Except for an advance in sugar and a few minor changes prices remain very much as they were.

A VISITOR FROM MEXICO.

The Grocer was favored this week with a visit from James Parkin, who a number of years ago was a familiar figure in Toronto, as the agent of the Lake of the Woods Milling Co., and who now occupies the position of secretary of the Motzorongo Sugar and Cattle Company, who own large estates near Vera Cruz, Mexico.

Mr. Parkin's company has been shipping raw sugar to England and the United States markets for four years and are rapidly developing their business.

"Has any of it come to Canada?" he was asked.

"No, not as yet. The refiners here do not seem to be anxious to buy from us, and though some steps have been taken to introduce our sugars here, nothing has yet come of it."

"Is your business a large one?" he was asked.

"Well, our estate comprises 160,000 acres, about 1,000 of which are devoted to sugar growing. This, however, is being rapidly extended. Last year." Mr. Parkin continued, "the crop was short and we were able to dispose of our product at home."

Mr. Parkin carries a sample of refined sugar from his company's plantation, which is of excellent quality. He talked interestingly of business in Mexico and told of pineapples weighing from 8 to 12 pounds and selling for $1 or $2 in New York, and of other features of the country. Mr. Parkin will be in Toronto for only a day or so, when he leaves for the firm's offices in Chicago.

TRADE NOTES.

McBride & McLeod, general merchants, Souris, Man., have assigned to C. H. Newton.

The business of J. W. Broatch, general merchant, Alexander, Man., is advertised for sale.

A. McDougall, grocer, Regina, Sask., has been succeeded by Regina South End Prod. Co.

CANNED GOODS

Montreal.—Meats are in fair demand as are also some lines of fish. Vegetables are rather active, whilst fruits are very much neglected.

TORONTO — Wholesale houses are shipping largely on orders taken earlier in the season. There is a good demand for fruits and vegetables, but other lines are rather dull.

WINNIPEG.—Cut prices in corn, peas and tomatoes still obtain and it now seems probable that there will be no material change in the local situation this season. Quotations are:—

POINTERS—

Sugar—Advanced and declined.
Coffee—Easier in primary markets.
Dried Fruits—Raisins firmer in Denia.
Beans—Easier.
Collections—Fair.

Toronto, October 29, 1908.

The wholesale markets continue rather quiet this week, a fact which is very difficult to explain. Several weeks ago business seemed to be opening up well, but the activity noticed then seems to have dropped off a little since. Of course, a fair amount of business is being done, the volume of which ought to compare pretty favorably with that at the same time last year, and yet wholesalers seem a little disappointed and surprised at present conditions. There was some hope that the elections were a factor in the dullness, but since nothing of change has occurred since Monday this does not seem to apply. The retailer appears to be pursuing the conservative policy he adopted some months ago. From one standpoint this is a good thing for it assures business being on a thoroughly satisfactory basis so far as accounts are concerned, which is pretty generally the case to-day, but on the other hand, it keeps the wholesale houses quieter.

Price changes in the local markets have been very few during the week. Sugar has been showing considerable fluctuation, as noted elsewhere, and beans also have varied, but other staples are fairly steady.

SUGAR—The rising European beet markets, which advanced fully a shilling in the last four weeks, and from which unfavorable crop reports were cabled at the end of the week, account for an advance of 10 points made first by the Canada Co. On Friday other refiners followed and official notice came to wholesalers of a change in all lines, but St. Lawrence still continued to sell at the old price. In the meantime European markets fell off again, there being a decline of 3d in a couple of days, and following this feeling, prices of Canadian refined were declined 10 points again on Tuesday, and now stand at the same point they did a week ago to-day. At the present time the market is steadier though fairly firm on good deliveries.

TEA—The local market is quiet and most brokers and jobbers are doing very little. Some Indians are being sold at close prices, but Ceylons are scarce and late cables report the market strong on all grades.

COFFEE—While reports from New York denote an easier market no change is felt in the situation here. Demand continues good from local points.

Willett & Gray give the world's visible supply, Oct., 1908, as 15,149,943 bags, as against 16,712,582 at the same date last year.

DRIED FRUITS—Demand is only fairly good and no price changes are evident since last week, though some firms are selling raisins and currants slightly below the market. New dates should be in in a day or two, the direct steamer Tabaristan having arrived at Montreal. Cables from Denia note a firming up on Valencia raisins. The prune situation this year is a little peculiar. Reports from the coast say the crop has been the shortest in 15 years, and yet prices remain on a fair basis. Present quotations are as follows :

BEANS—The market was a little firmer at the end of the week, but has eased off a little since. Wholesalers do not seem to be paying much attention to these goods, but local brokers are doing brisk business. Some parties say the year's crop is short, but when the market firms up the supply begins to increase so rapidly as to disprove this. Wholesalers are quoting to-day :

EVAPORATED APPLES — Goods coming in continue to be of very fair quality, and though local wholesalers are not selling heavily, brokers are doing a good deal of business. The feeling is slightly firmer this week.

RE-FITTING HAMILTON OFFICES.

The offices of the F. F. Dalley Co., Hamilton, have recently been re-arranged and redecorated in such a way that the place would scarcely be recognized. The interior has been finished in a Flemish style, a more convenient arrangement secured and the private offices are particularly well equipped for comfort and convenience.

Incidentally, a letter was received this week from the vice-president, Frank Menzie, who is at present looking after the company's interests in San Diego, Cal. He says : "We came down here to work this city, as it is the only one outside of Los Angeles and San Francisco that has any jobbers. We found that the U.S. gunboats were in here a few weeks ago and bought every box of "2 in 1" shoe polish they could find."

Another somewhat similar letter from Denning, Ark., says : "I notice the Pullman porters all use "2 in 1" and obtain a first-class shine therefrom."

U.S. WHOLESALERS' MOVE FOR STEADY PRICES.

The Executive Committee of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association of the United States, which had been meeting in New York for some days, adjourned on Saturday.

The meeting was held for the purpose of widening the scope of operations of the association and comprehensive plans were outlined for this. One of the significant features of the meeting was a move emphasizing the maintaining of list prices and the granting by manufacturers of reasonable cash discounts.

The next meeting of the association will be held in Detroit on June 2, 3 and 4, 1909.

"Men Who Sell Things"

Chapter XX. .Continued—Optimism Regarding the Goods a Helpful Factor— A Positive Salesman and the Story of His Success—The Negative alesman and His Drawbacks.

By Walter D. Moody—Serial rights for Canada purchased by the MacLean Publishing Co. from the publishers, A. McClurg & Co., Chicago.

Salesman Should Be Optimistic.

It's a great thing for the salesman to be optimistic about the goods he has to sell ; to take a cheerful view of the buyer's ability. The salesman with a cheerful view will grow and succeed with the poorest sort of backing—that is where personality comes in ; a gloomy, discouraged man can never hope to be anything but a trailer. An opportunity to buy United States Government bonds bearing interest at ten per cent., or Bank of England stock at fifty cents on the dollar, would have no rose-colored hue for him.

Gloom depresses the heart and weakens the salesman's selling-talk.

We learn to do by doing—not by complaining. Make the best of things, and see how clear a path is the road that leads to success.

Lucky is the salesman who can put his little individuality on the side of that big giant progress, and do his share to pull in the right direction, and help to take away from others the stupidity that clings so desperately to those who believe in the superiority of their own knowledge of how things should be done, as measured against that of those whom they are serving.

To save myself from being misunderstood, I feel called upon every little while to explain that "Men Who Sell Things" is written for negative salesmen, not positive ones.

A Positive Salesman.

Speaking of positive salesmen, Billy Morris came in to sell my partner hats one day. After a voluble talk—it was a warm day—Billy took off his coat and began all over again. My partner knew that Billy was up against it with a poor line, but he was a great admirer of men who possess contagious enthusiasm, and he gave him the privilege of showing a few samples.

Billy knew that it was not a very good line that he had, but he singled out one hat and waxed warm with enthusiasm, saying, "I positively want to tell you, Mr. M——, this is, without exception the best hat in the world."

"Do you mean that, Billy—the best hat in the world ?" asked my partner.

Quicker than a flash he came back with, "Yes, the best hat in the world."

Billy dwelt on the beauties of that hat so much, repeating that it was "the best hat in the world," barring none, that my partner bought a bill of him.

For years after that, through his having made such a strong assertion, we remembered him always as "the man with the best hat in the world," and he got an order pretty nearly every time he came around through his having made a hit with his superlative.

Billy used to be familiarly known to those in the trade who had salesrooms in the vicinity in which he was located in New York, in congested Lower Broadway.

Various Opinions.

He would approach a customer entering his salesroom, and walk him up to his display, and dilate on the beauties of his hats with great force and positiveness. If he succeeded in making a sale, he would come out rubbing his hands, his face clothed in smiles, and had soared to the highest enthusiasm, If things went the other way after he had soared to the highest enthusiasm, and he failed to land his man for a bill, he would come out and tell the boys, with a very solemn face, "That buyer can't last. He don't know good values when he sees them."

Billy is still traveling and prosperous. He owns a partnership in the business he helped to build up by his unbounded faith in his line, and has money from his income to speculate in New York real estate.

A poor workman always finds fault with his tools, and a poor salesman always finds fault with his goods. He may have the most salable line to be found anywhere, but that is generally a small part of what he has to sell. His strong line is excuses, traveling to get ahead of some competitor, or cutting the price. Billy Morris sold goods because he believed in what he had to sell. If secretly he had admitted that his goods were poor, he could not publicly have impressed his customers with their merchantable value.

The Negative Salesman.

The man who knows, or thinks he knows, that his line is not up to that of his competitor, begins by doing all manner of things not calculated to add to his efficiency, things in keeping with his lack of confidence. He is a negative salesman, imbued with the idea that he must in some manner overcome the fancied weaknesses of the buyers.

For a time his sole object in life seems to be to try to be ahead of his competitors. Meeting you in the lobby of some hotel, he will ask, "Have you seen Jones yet ?" Upon receiving a negative answer, he continues with, "I cleaned up with him all right. I was in X—— ahead of him, and I have been two days ahead of him all the way around."

He seems delighted and satisfied to be two days ahead of the other man, when it could be shown in numerous instances that his bugaboo, Jones, while following behind him, was selling anywhere from two to four times as much goods with a poorer line of merchandise, simply because he was out to sell merchandise, while our weak-kneed friend was out to make towns ahead of his competitors, in the blind hope of covering the supposed errors in judgment of the buyers of his line.

The "Starter."

Never quite sure of his goods, we find him again in the role of "starter"—the salesman that is always selling some article below cost for a bill-starter. About three-quarters of his business is done in bill-starters, without profit. He always has the brightest possible prospects on paper, but they never materialize. Cornered by the sales manager for cutting the price, he will begin by excusing his action on the ground that the goods were not right, or that the house around the corner had the same thing at a closer price.

Another idea that he possesses is that one new account looks better to him than twice the amount sold to his regular customers.

He is always chasing new scenery, and giving Jones plenty of room to take his old trade away because of his instability.

He seems willing enough to open his goods if a customer will look at them ; which reminds me of a friend who said that when he was a boy he used to call frequently in company with neighboring boys on a lady who lived close by. She would tantalize the boys by telling what lovely cake she had in the pantry, and she would get each of them a piece if they cared for any. Being well-bred boys, they always refused, until one day they broke her heart by saying in chorus that they would have a piece.

The man who never thinks his goods are right is easily led into arguments with his trade. I once had such a salesman. His prices and styles were never right, and apparently he would rather get into an argument than sell goods.

Where They Sent Him.

One day he got into an argument with a customer who was an ardent Romanist, and in place of selling the man merchandise, began to argue that there was no such place as Purgatory. In the midst of the argument, a young Irish priest came in, and the merchant said, "Father Reilly, what do you think of this man, who argues there is no such place as Purgatory ?"

Father Reilly answered, "Let him go to Hell, then." The salesman who is continually endeavoring to defend his right of position and parading the errors of the other fellow by arguing is beyond redemption.

Bring yourself to the point where you believe there are no buyers in the business like the buyers in your house, and you will soon forget that your competitors live in the same block.

While no move of the competitor should be overlooked, it is also well not to lose much time keeping an eye on him. He will perceive your eagerness, and will certainly mislead you.

New Brunswick Canner Carries Off Honors in Elections—Business Brisk in Nova Scotia—Some Good Window Displays in Montreal.

ST. JOHN.

October 27.—The Dominion elections have been occupying so much attention the past week or two that business has had to take a secondary place, but now that the campaign is over, conditions will quickly return to the normal. There have been few changes of any importance in the markets. Poultry of all kinds is scarce and high and the quality below the average. Chickens and fowl are quoted at from 70c to $1.25 a pair, and what few turkeys have been received are selling at 25c and 26c a lb. It is expected the supply for Thanksgiving day will be fairly plentiful and prices reasonable.

Contracts for supplying the C.P.R. steamers coming here this winter have been awarded as follows: For meats, poultry and game, F. E. Williams Co.; vegetables, Charles Phillips; fish, P. A. Smith.

Reports received here indicate that the grain shipments from this port during the coming season will be very heavy. The estimate is placed at 12,000,000 to 14,000,000 bushels, which would be about double the amount shipped last year.

The steamer Talisman of the St. John, Boston, Cuba line, sailed from here last week with a large cargo. The greater part of her freight was potatoes that were shipped from provincial points to Cuba. Some 10,000 barrels of the tubers were taken away on this trip, and it is estimated that on her next voyage about 28,000 barrels will be shipped.

Frank Mullin, of Elmore & Mullin, wholesale grocers, on the South Wharf, has made his mark for the season as a hunter of big game. Last week he went into the woods at the upper end of the county and secured a moose weighing 700 pounds.

W. S. Loggie, M.P., for Northumberland County, of the Loggie Canning Co., at Loggieville, was one of the successful candidates in Monday's election. He is a supporter of the Laurier administration.

HALIFAX.

October 26.—The retail grocery business is good at the present time, but the wholesale trade is dull, due to the elections. Business men will rejoice when they are over and conditions resume their normal state. The prospects for the future are bright. Collections are reported very good, not only in the city, but in other parts of the province. Produce vessels from Prince Edward Island are now beginning to arrive here.

The potato crop on Prince Edward Island this season is very large and of good quality. Great activity now prevails at all shipping points on the island, as scores of vessels are loading produce for the mainland. The oyster crop is also said to be very good. Heavy shipments are being made to the Montreal market. So far very few island oysters have been received here, and no large shipments are expected this way until after the close of navigation on the St. Lawrence. Cape Breton and United States oysters are in good supply here, and the quality is about the average.

The receipts of Nova Scotia eggs are falling off, and it is expected that they will continue to become less now that the cold weather has set in. Prince Edward Island eggs are in good supply, but the quality is only fair. They are quoted at 21c.

Butter is very firm and the tendency is for higher prices. Very little winter butter has been marketed so far, but it is reported that there is considerable in several of the country districts. The season has been an unusually good one for butter-making and there should be no shortage such as prevailed last year.

There has been a great shortage of bacon on the local market of late, and many of the grocers have not been able to supply their customers. Nearly all the bacon now offered for sale is from Toronto, and the dealers say that their customers prefer it to any other, even though it costs at least 2c per pound more. There is one complaint, however, and that is in regard to shipments, on which there appears to be an unnecessary delay. Orders are not filled until two weeks after they are placed. The dealers here say that with the present transportation facilities, the shippers should fill the orders more promptly.

Large shipments of apples are going forward to Liverpool by every boat. The prices in London are reported to be good.

MONTREAL.

October 27.—H. C. Smith, corner of Esplanade and Villeneuve Ave., Annex, has recently installed a large ham and bacon slicing machine. Mr. Smith's grocery, while not large, is replete with up-to-date fittings for a modern store and presents a very bright and attractive appearance.

In conversation with a French grocer who has a store in an English quarter, some information regarding the part nationality plays in business, or to be more accurate, the part which it does not play, was obtained. The grocer in question stated that he had been in business in an English community for many years and had been successful. He said he had many customers who lived much nearer English grocers than they did to him, but had remained his customers in spite of that fact. This is certainly an ideal condition to exist in a country where two distinct nationalities reside, and demonstrates the fact that racial prejudice is more of a myth than some suppose. Taking these facts into consideration, it was interesting to find the same conditions existing where there was an English-speaking grocer in a French district.

Attractive tea rooms run in connection with retail tea and coffee stores make a pleasing and evidently profitable addition to such stores. The Castle Tea Co. of this city, operate in connection with their store a tea room which is well patronized, This fact, in a degree, is due, no doubt, to the attractiveness of the room itself, which is decorated in the best of taste.

W. J. Wilson, eastern representative of S. H. Ewing & Sons, spice manufacturers, has been laid up for a few days by injuries which he received in a nasty car accident. He is around again, however, and is quite as chipper as ever.

J. B. Berthiaume, corner Prince Arthur and Park Avenue, is showing this week an attractive window display of cereal breakfast foods.

A window which is attracting much attention is that in the grocery of J. H. Joyer, corner of Metcalf Ave. and St. Catherine St., Westmount, which is displaying Magic baking powder. The window dressing is very clever, which is due to the originality of Wm. Murray, Montreal representative of E. W. Gillett Co., Ltd.

Irving Knights, who for many years was a partner in the firm of Parker & Knights, Hatley, Que., grocers and general merchants, has sold his business to F. D. Melloon, of Rock Island. Mr. Knights has entered a new field of activity and has an office on St. Paul St. in this city. He has recently returned from a trip to the west, where he has been introducing a new lifting jack, and reports business good.

Wm. Murray, Montreal representative of E. W. Gillett Co., Ltd., Toronto, was in Quebec this week. Mr. Murray reports a very heavy business in all his company's lines.

James Duncan, Jr., of Friedland, Cal., is visiting relatives in this city. Mr. Duncan's father and mother were Canadians and went to California in the 50's where his father engaged in various occupations, finally becoming a grocer and following this business until his death some years ago. This is Mr. Duncan's first visit to Canada and he expressed himself as highly pleased with everything he had seen, and said that although a good American, he had always been much interested in Canada. Mr. Duncan and his wife will sail shortly for England and the continent, where they expect to spend the winter.

The Caledonian Biscuit and Confectionery Co. have been remodelling their premises and will shortly be in a position to handle the increase in business which their improved plant is likely to bring them.

Raye—"What's a financial pessimist?"

British Columbia Apples Finding Good Markets in Japan and China—Mexican Bananas Coming to Vancouver—Saskatoon Fruit Merchants Asking Privileges.

VANCOUVER.

October 24.—British Columbia apples are in great demand the world over this year, and the product on the whole is of excellent quality. The care taken in packing, also, has been exceptional and has enhanced the value. A feature of the market has been the refusal by the Victoria Fruit Growers' Exchange of eastern orders for a carload of apples and one of pears, because of the demand on Vancouver Island and the mainland. Another gratifying feature is the orders for apples that have been received from the comptroller of the Mikado's household, specifying certain British Columbia varieties by name. The apples had all to be carefully selected, and the order is the result of samples forwarded last season. A Shanghai merchant has also sent an order for a sample shipment and hopes to be able to dispose of apples from this province in China.

Advices from Vancouver Island are that the pear crop is rather short this year, only about half the usual quantity. Growers state this is an off year, and the crop has been further reduced on account of the measures taken to prevent the spread of pests. The quantity on the market at Victoria is too small to fill orders.

Prunes on Vancouver Island, too, are only average in crop, and were marketed too early to take advantage of the firmer prices. The output on the island is placed at 50,000 crates, or about 1,000,000 pounds, and of this 30,000 crates were shipped east, where the demand is exceptionally good.

Stormy scenes took place at a special general meeting of the Kootenay Fruit Growers' Association, when the resignation of Roy Brock as secretary of the association was accepted. A temporary secretary was appointed. Concerning the unsatisfactory returns made to fruit sellers during the past season, much discussion arose and heated remarks were made, the language used being plain, unmistakable and at times violent in the extreme. A general decision was arrived at to reorganize for the next season on new lines, it being claimed that one of the chief sources of trouble was the centering of the business at Revelstoke to the detriment of Kootenay ranchers. It was asserted that more than one member of the association had sold fruit apart from the association and had realized better prices than had members who worked through the officials.

At the Coldstream orchard, near Vernon, 65 tons of apples were taken from 161 trees of the Pewaukee variety. At 43 pounds to the box, this would give a total of 3,023 boxes, bringing close on to $1,000 an acre gross.

Merchants generally express entire satisfaction at the way their business has kept up to a good level all through the recent quiet times. They state that they have nothing to complain about, and this month actually shows a good percentage increase over the same period of last year.

H. A. Edgett & Co. have added another department to their already very complete grocery store. This is a fresh meat counter, where all kinds of meat are kept under glass in perfect condition.

Jack Drainie, of William Braid & Co., was married the other day to Miss Nora Montgomery, of London. His fellow employes gave as a present on the occasion a fine grandfather's clock.

The Kootenay Jam Company has been incorporated as a limited liability company, and will shortly issue a prospectus containing the financial and business lines along which it will operate in the future. It is proposed to build a new factory and warehouse in Nelson.

Bananas from Mexico are on the market in the coast cities, and are meeting with favor. George A. Williams brought a shipment of 2,000 bunches on the steamer Lonsdale from his plantation at San Blas. As an indication of how the trade expands, Mr. Williams stated that a start was made with one shipment a month from San Blas to San Francisco, and now steamers call four times a month. There is no difficulty in laying down the fruit here, and if arrangements could be made for the vessels to call, about 5,000 bunches a month could easily be disposed of in Vancouver and Victoria.

SASKATOON.

October 24.—At the last meeting of the city council the matter of passing a by-law for the protection of the wholesale fruit merchants was considered. The wholesalers brought to the notice of the city fathers the fact that fruit and other goods were being brought to town in half-car and smaller quantities by parties who paid no license for doing business. The matter was discussed by the councillors, but no action was taken, several of them being in favor of allowing as much fruit to come into town as possible.

Early & Early have just received two cars of potatoes, two cars of mill feed and one car of flour. They are making a special effort to supply every customer with what potatoes they require for the winter.

The Rogers Fruit Co. have made application for sewer and water connections for their new warehouse on First Avenue.

Currie Bros., of Second Avenue, have appealed to the city council to have the street in front of their store cleared of building material and made passable for their customers. The matter is being seen to.

Interesting Ontario Items

ST. THOMAS.

Oct. 28.—Despite the pouring rain the Norton market was well attended on Saturday by both buyers and sellers. Supplies were quickly purchased and concessions were made in order to get home quickly. Chickens sold from 50c to 75c per pair; butter at 27c to 28c per lb.; eggs, 25c per doz.; apples, 60c per bushel; potatoes 90c to $1 per bag. Other vegetables were in good demand with no change in prices. The rain lasted nearly all day and the grocers, although it was Saturday, did not complain as it was so badly required. Notwithstanding, everybody had a fairly good day's business.

Police Magistrate Glenn gave judgment this week on the peddling case brought against Burgess, of London, by Inspector Shaw. He dismissed the case on the grounds that the fee of $75 per annum was prohibitory and raised the point himself, although in a previous case under the same by-law he rendered judgment against the defendant. Burgess acknowledged peddling and has done it for years and is in direct competition with the merchants who have to pay a heavy business tax and this, in the face of the fact that the City Council amended the by-law by reducing the license fee for peddling with a one-horse wagon from $150 to $75 per annum. It shows a lack of knowledge of business, as any one who knows anything about the peddling business knows that they would clear that amount in a month, besides it is a nuisance to have strange men going into the homes of absent husbands and in some instances intimidating the woman to buy and in many cases they do buy to get rid of the impudent intruders and are usually swindled. The magistrate remanded this Burgess case five times and in the meantime the peddling has continued. It is up to the merchants who are interested in this evil to get busy.

BRANTFORD.

Oct. 28.—Some time ago the working men of the city sent a petition to the City Council signed by over two thousand men requesting that a by-law be passed to enable the butchers on the market to cut up their meat in smaller quantities than the present by-law allows; namely, to sell by the half-quarter and no less. A by-law was prepared and at the last meeting of the Council received its third reading and carried in spite of a great deal of opposition. However, as the butchers and grocers who handle fresh meats have a license until next June it will not go into effect until then. It is also left for next year's Council to provide facilities at the market for handling meat in small quantities.

THE LOVE OF EXCELLENCE

Doing Things With a Lofty Purpose the Secret of Success and Advancement.

By Orison Swett Marden in Success Magazine.

William Howard Taft's remarkable career is an illustration of the steady and persistent advancement which comes from doing things with a lofty purpose in view.

Mr. Taft did not have great genius to start with, but he decided to make it an invariable rule to do whatever came to him so especially well that it would become a stepping-stone to something higher.

Many young men look for an open door to advancement outside of their regular work; to some mysterious power or good luck. But young Taft knew that his ability to do something more important would be judged by the quality of his daily work, and that the step to something higher, to the place above him was in the thing he was doing at the time. He knew that his record must ultimately stand, not on what people though he could do if he had an opportunity, but upon what he actually did, and that his advancement depended on the trade-mark which he stamped upon everything that went through his hands.

A love of excellence for its own sake characterized Mr. Taft from boyhood, and it is this, above all else, which has enabled him, amid the turmoil and temptations of public life, to keep his record clean and to stamp superiority upon everything he does, and to do everything to a complete finish.

His career is a good example of the advancing force of high aims, and the possibilities that lie in doing everything entrusted to one just as well as it can be done.

Prepare for Something Better.

Every little while we hear of young men and young women taking sudden, tremendous jumps. Apparently without any intermediary steps they leap from the position of a stenographer or private secretary to a much more responsible situation. If we investigated we should find that the person who seems to advance at a bound has been preparing for the higher position for years; by earning vastly more than he found in his pay envelope, by doing whatever was given him to do to a complete finish, thus building up a reputation for doing things in a superior way, and also establishing confidence in his employer that he is capable of filling a more responsible position.

A new York millionaire told me, some time ago, that when working his way up his salary was raised from seven dollars a week to three thousand dollars a year without any intermediate steps, and he was also made a partner in the concern for which he was working. He had agreed to work for the firm for so many years at seven dollars a week, but he had grit and determination and no idea of just trying to earn seven dollars a week and then stopping. He was resolved to show his employers that he was equal to any man in their employ, and that he was capable and worthy of being made a partner. The quality of his work very quickly commanded attention.

Put your trade-mark upon everything you touch.

Every Item is Important.

Every piece of work that goes out of your hands is more important to you than every piece of the work that goes out from the factories of the well-known New York firm, Tiffany & Company, is to them. They can back everything they do with the weight of a reputation which required a century to build up. Everything that goes out from this establishment is guaranteed to be just as they represent it, the best of its kind. How did it get its world-wide reputation? By doing things to a complete finish, by doing them as well as they could be done, by being absolutely reliable.

You are not in the store-keeping business, but you are in business of some sort. What is your merchandise? Everything that comes out of your hand is a piece of your merchandise. You are giving it to the world in your service. It should bear the hall-mark of your character, should have your trade-mark upon it.

Everything you do should stand for superiority, for excellence; should be proof positive that it is not done in a slipshod, slovenly way, but that it is done to a complete finish, just as well as you know how to do it, just as well as any human being can do it.

Some one says that efficiency never has to go begging for advancement; the man that masters his trade goes to the front.

I know a young man who was advanced over the heads of much older men than he is, simply because he filled minor positions with marked superiority and took infinite pains to stamp his efficiency and integrity upon everything he did. His financier employers watching him, took his measure and placed him in the highest office in their institution, a position which he has filled for years with great efficiency. He has recently been offered the presidency of a great institution in which he has had no experience whatever. He was chosen because of the marked superiority which has characterized his work and everything he has ever undertaken.

Finishing Things.

I once knew this young man to forego an important banquet to which he had been invited, and keep a force of stenographers in his office until ten o'clock at night, rewriting a large number of letters, because of a mistake which many of those in positions above him would have regarded as too trivial to make such a fuss about. A misspelled word, a carelessly written letter, bad punctuation, a stamp up-side-down or crosswise on an envelope, a blunder or inaccuracy of any kind were not trifles to this man. Everything which went through his hands had to be done to a complete finish. To do it "fairly well," "pretty well," was not enough; it must be done just right. No doubt many of those above him laughed at him for being so particular, for keeping his stenographers after hours to remedy a trifling defect, but they did not laugh long at him. The officers who would not recognize him on the street a few years ago, when he was a "nobody" in the concern, now take their hats off to him.

Make it an unvarying principle of your life to touch nothing upon which you can not put the trade-mark of your character, the patent of your manhood. When any piece of work goes out from your hands, let it bear the stamp of a man.

WILL LABEL STORAGE FOWL.

Pennsylvania Officials Drafting Law to Regulate Sale of Articles.

Harrisburg, Penn., Oct. 29.—Legislation to prevent the sale of cold storage poultry or eggs, except when distinctly labelled as such, and to drive out of business compounds of partially spoiled eggs, which are sold as egg products, is now being considered by the State officials. Bills to regulate the sale of cold stored articles of food have been in contemplation for some time, and James Foust, dairy and food commissioner, has just completed a draft of one. Recent investigations have shown that some of the egg products are made up not only in a manner which raises doubts as to their fitness for food, but that the business is extensive and growing.

It is Mr. Foust's idea to require that fowls and eggs kept in cold storage for more than 10 days, shall be classed at "cold storage" and before being exposed for sale be labelled in letters at least an inch long. Furthermore, the bill will provide that no fowls shall be placed in cold storage and then offered for sale unless they have been cleaned. The penalty for selling such articles of food against the provisions of the act is a fine of from $50 to $500, or the imprisonment of from 30 to 90 days.

CHEESE AND BUTTER BULLETIN

Montreal, Oct. 28, 1908.

The receipts of butter are falling off and the strong finish which the production was expected to make will not materialize. The effects of the long drought are beginning to be felt now. Although it was broken by a much-needed rain, the soaking which the ground got was not sufficient to revive the parched condition of the grass, and no rain of any consequence has fallen until Monday night. Taking all these facts together the season has been an exceedingly dry one, and this fact is now making itself obvious in the diminished supplies arriving. This fact has led to higher prices, as the demand is good, and dealers are experiencing some difficulty in obtaining the sufficient quantities to supply their wants. Advices arriving from England report a scarcity of finest grades, which will exert a tendency to maintain prices at a high level, until the Australian and New Zealand products arrive in larger quantities. This is the time of the year in which these butters are most sought for in the English markets. This is due to the fact that they are the first of the season, and have a fresh grass flavor which is very pleasing. Such a condition militates against the sale of the Canadian product, which, taken in conjunction with the high prices which prevail at this time of the year, precludes the possibility of doing much business with the English dealers. Then, again, another factor which is adverse to large sales is the fact that Britain takes only our finest grades and such are difficult to supply at the tail-end of the season. It is held by the English importers that it has a slight fodder taste at this time of the year. The market in a wholesale way is rather quiet. Advices from the English importers state that buyers seem to be trying to force a drop in values, but the situation hardly warrants it. The quantity of best butters on hand is not by any means large and the arrivals are not more than would be necessary to meet ordinary requirements. The stock of secondary is pretty full and sellers have to take a little less money in order to keep it moving a bit, but for anything showing flavor and texture there is a fair demand and prices are upheld. The Copenhagen committee were fully expected to take back the rise they imposed last week, especially having regard to the fact that the increased shipments from the Scandinavian peninsula were met by diminished orders. But the Danish committee are bull, and it appears to me that they have reason for being so, as the statistical position is all in their favor, the only adverse factor being the undoubted falling off in the ordinary demand, which is checked by bad trade and strikes. Prices are not easily upheld, and, having regard to the strange industrial conditions, it may not be possible for holders to keep up their end for long. But the lookout is not at present fraught with heavy supplies. The arrivals of Australian are quite insignificant at present, little having come into London and some of the ports not having seen any this season to date. The shipments from New Zealand are nil, and Siberian imports are fading gradually away. There is little Canadian, indeed, barely sufficient to make a market, and prices of last week are just made: 116s to 118s.

Exports of butter last week were 3,755 packages, as against nil packages for the previous week, and nil packages for the corresponding week of last year. Total exports since May 1, 92,172 packages, as against 66,761 packages for the corresponding period of last year.

For the week, 6,210 packages, against 7,339 the previous week, and 7,006 packages for the corresponding week last year.

Total receipts since May 1, 365,066 packages, as against 360,093 packages for the corresponding period of last year.

The price of butter is quoted at 25½c in round lots, and 26c to 26½c in a jobbing way.

The cheese market in the country is slightly advanced, especially for colored. Export demand is not very brisk. There seems to be considerable lethargy displayed by the consuming public in England and some stimulus to the trade would be welcomed.

An importer of Canadian cheese in England writes his correspondent here to the effect that he has received very contradictory estimates of the stocks of cheese in Canada, one party stating that they are 80,000 boxes less than at the corresponding time last year, another correspondent from Montreal says they are about the same as last year, whilst a third writes that they are 150,000 boxes less. A fourth states that at the close of the present season they will be between 200,000 and 250,000 boxes less than at same time in 1907. Is it any wonder that parties in Great Britain dub their correspondents here either fabricators or fools? If we take the figures of the Board of Trade here the total receipts of the present season up to Oct. 17 were 1,677,281 boxes, and the shipments 1,480,828 boxes, leaving stocks in store here 196,453 boxes. They were much larger a year ago. The Ottawa Valley Journal says that Russell County farmers are heavy losers financially, and that the amount paid by factories for milk will average about $70 per patron less than in 1907.

Receipts of cheese for the week were 42,179 boxes, against 61,814 boxes for the previous week, and 51,610 boxes for the corresponding week of last year. Total receipts since May 1, 1,709,400 boxes against 1,891,007 boxes for the corresponding period of last year. Western are quoted at 12½c for white and 12⅝c for colored, and Easterns at 11⅞c to 11¾c. Total exports since May 1, 1,586,911 boxes, as against 1,828,731 boxes for the corresponding period of last year.

THE PROVISION SITUATION

Toronto, Oct. 29, 1908.

Notwithstanding the fact that the British market has fallen off a couple of shillings during the week good business at home is keeping the packers fairly well occupied though the situation generally is perhaps a little easier than at last reports.

Very little Canadian goods are going forward just now. The British market is filled up with Danish and Irish bacon, and consumption seems to be materially curtailed this season by reason of the many factory operatives and others out of work by reason of strikes and dull business in some of the large consuming centres. Considering this, there is little enough demand for the Canadian product and packing houses are sending over just enough to keep their name before the public.

Light export business is, however, made up for by large demand and good business at home. Stocks of the finer cuts, long, clear bacon, backs, etc., became very low during the hog shortage a few weeks ago and with a particularly good demand for this time of the year the packers are kept quite busy. Prices on these lines have been quite firm until the last couple of weeks when a tendency to ease off under rather better supplies is evident. Lard, also, is in better supply and has dropped slightly on local markets.

The run of hogs during the week has been only fairly large, and as yet nothing is heard of the large deliveries which usually occur about this time. That packers are getting all the hogs they want, however, is shown by the fact that prices have dropped at least a quarter during the week. Last week packers were offering $6 to $6.10 f.o.b. This week's price is $5.75 f.o.b., $6.10 fed and watered.

The New York Journal of Commerce, summarizing the situation in United States markets says:

"The speculative market in hogs and hog products has shown frequent variations during the week, but the absence of influences of a pronounced type has been at the mercy of the professional element. Trading has been marked by no price fluctuations of a sensational nature and business has been restricted in volume. While the receipts of hogs are 55 per cent. larger than last year, quality is decidedly inferior, the average weights being but 208 pounds, against 245 pounds in normal times. Outside speculators, however, are not inclined to force prices upward in the face of these heavy arrivals, which, by the way, represent the stock usually forwarded in January and February. The receipts for Monday are estimated as high as 42,000, and it is expected that at least 150,000 will come in during the week. The condition of the hogs themselves and the speed with which they are being rushed to market are traceable to the same cause; namely, the long-continued dry weather. Grass has been burned up and the animals have had a hard tussle for existence. It has been too early to feed them corn to any extent, and few farmers have had any old supplies of feed on hand. Then again, the weather, while particularly unfavorable for hogs, has been excellent for corn, and its condition is such that the prospect of profits has seemed more alluring in marketing the grain itself than in connecting it with pork. Furthermore, in those sections where farmers are accustomed to do their usual fall plowing and seeding, the ground has been so hard as to make it impossible and they have, therefore, been able to turn their attention to the shipment of live stock instead. Packers are naturally finding considerable fault with the immature hogs now being forced upon them and are exerting all the influence possible to force the farmers to feed the hogs before attempting to sell them and hope to be able to obtain improved stock in the later shipments.

THE FLOUR AND CEREAL MARKETS

The Situation Generally Steady—Stocks of Flour on Spot Rather Light—Export Business Less Active.

The situation this week shows little change from last reports. The market is generally steady with good business continuing in flour and conditions a little quieter in oat products.

Flour continues firm with an outlook for pretty steady prices during the winter. Stocks on spot are not at all heavy, the excellent demand of the last few weeks having taken up about everything the millers could turn out. This has had a material effect on export business, as millers have had nothing to offer in reply to active inquiry from several quarters.

Business in oat products is a little quieter than usual at this time of the year and it evidently wants a snap of cold weather to get this going. Some export business is being done, however, in these lines.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR—At present the outlook is not favorable to a drop in prices. This fact is beginning to be realized by the country, and orders are now being booked with greater freedom. There is a scarcity in flour on the spot, and stocks are generally pretty slim. These conditions will prevent any slump in prices for some time. Quotations are the same as last quoted.

FLOUR—The situation is practically unchanged after last week's advance. Business continues very good though it is not quite so active as during the past few weeks. Manitoba wheat is coming in in fine quality. Export business has been a little dull the past week from the fact that millers had little to offer. Local prices are unchanged.

WHAT ABOUT PRIVATE BRANDS?

Correspondent Discusses Question From a Practical Standpoint.

Does it pay to have your own special brands of tea, coffee, baking powder, extracts, etc., was a question asked the writer this week. Some merchants seem to think it does not. It generally is their own fault if they do not make it pay. It pays provided you are willing to take or give your clerks proper time to introduce to your trade these different articles and also see they are properly handled and advertised. If you blend your own teas and coffees and make your own baking powder see to it that they are kept perfectly uniform in quality. Don't skip one thing this week and another the next, as it is the continuous sameness in regard to quality that holds the trade. The fluctuating of qualities of certain of these articles is generally caused by carelessness in the blending. Make one man responsible for the blending. Quality should be the main consideration in anything you put your own name on. If you do not believe in advertising or feel you can not afford to do so and want quick sales by all means don't have your own brands but take advantage of the popular brands that are properly advertised. Don't get too many different brands at that, but confine yourself to exactly what your own particular trade demands. Some of these you will have to carry in stock anyhow as it is not a wise policy to have to tell your customers that you have not in stock any really good article that is asked for. You need to take advantage of a manufacturer or wholesaler's advertising when you get the opportunity, as it all helps very much to keep you in touch with the best retail trade.

FRUITS, VEGETABLES AND FISH

Canadian Fruit Practically Off the Market—Florida and Jamaica Oranges Command Attention—Fish Business Opening Briskly.

Though most lines of Canadian fruit are practically off the market business this week continues quite brisk. Hallowe'en demand always lends a touch of activity to the markets. A small quantity of peaches are still on the market though this is practically the last of them. Grapes are in pretty good supply and will be coming for a week yet. Pears, too, are still on and will be for a couple of weeks. The late Valencia orange season is over and attention is being turned to Floridas, which are in fairly good demand.

Bananas have not been much called for during the local fruit season but from now on business in them should be good. Wholesale houses are making preparations for a big business in this fruit this winter. Florida pineapples are in fairly good supply and offer good buying. California Tokay grapes are among the new lines.

The potato market has remained steady during the week. Supplies of local grown are so large and satisfactory that there is little call for the New Brunswick varieties. Other lines also are steady though the supply of the less hardy lines is dwindling as the season advances. New England garden truck is again finding a place on the markets and the demand for this stuff is quite active.

The fish business is opening up in a very promising way. Every year the consumption of fish seems to grow larger and this season promises to be no exception. The demand for dried and smoked lines is rather better and oysters also are beginning to be more largely called for.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS—Florida oranges are a shade higher this week, being quoted now at $4 instead of $3.75. Jamaicas are the same as at last quotation. Almeria grapes are now offering at $5.50 to $6.50. Pears in boxes are 25c cheaper this week. Other lines remain the same as at last report. The demand has been good during the week.

TORONTO.

GREEN FRUITS—Saturday saw the last day of business at the Scott St. fruit market, the Ontario fruit being practically done and business is now being carried on in the warehouses. Ontario peaches, pears and grapes are still to be had though the quantities are limited. The first car of Florida grape fruit came in during the week and the season is this favored line promises to open well. Fancy California Tokay grapes are on the market in good quality and are attracting considerable attention. Florida pineapples are selling fairly freely as are also Almeria grapes.

VEGETABLES—Ontario potatoes are in excellent demand this week and the quality and supply is so good that there is little call for New Brunswick potatoes. Canadian tomatoes are rather scarce on the market, but a supply from California, the first by the way, ever to come to Canada, came in early in the week. This stock was in very presentable form, being carefully wrapped in tissue and packed in crates of about 22 lbs. Selling at $1.25 per crate, this ought to be a favorite line. Other lines of vegetables remain fairly steady though the market is firm all round.

PAYING THE GROCERY BILL.

Now that the tumult and the shouting of the prosperity-boomers are dying away it is becoming evident that the return of good times must be induced by other means than the beating of drums and the clashing of cymbals. "Thrift, thrift, Horatio!" is the remedy indicated, and wherever it has been applied the recovery from business depression has been more or less manifest.

Practice thrift and pay the grocery bill! That's the motto which should be hung up in every home in the land. If it were lived up to, the present dullness of business would soon give way to activity, and we would either escape another panic entirely or suffer very little in the event of another business crisis showing up.

Paying the grocery bill would be the first lesson in thrift for many people, and it would easily pave the way for great economics. Let the pulpit preach it and the press urge it. Let the schools teach it and the bench enforce it. Let the Big Stick be swung in the air a few times, to awe the slow payer and the beat. Let the grocer's advertising matter ring the changes on the pay, pay, pay text, until its importance is recognized throughout the length and breadth of the land.—Merchants' Review.

Walter D. Moody, secretary of the Chicago Association of Commerce, with whom such an organization has always been a pet theme, is the prime mover in the association and occupied the chair at the inaugural meeting.

Our Clerks' Page

HELPFUL HINTS FOR THE GROCER'S ASSISTANT.

It takes enthusiasm to make a successful grocery clerk. I believe that the clerk who makes a success of his work and builds well for the future should be willing to work long hours if necessary.

There is always something to do around a grocery store. The clerk should always be busy. He is forming habits. Loafing is a poor one to form. Industry is better. It is rarely necessary to look for work around a store, as the opportunity is usually in plain sight.

Section hands keep their eyes on the boss. They work where he points. The clerk should never imitate the section hand. He should not wait for the proprietor to "point."

The clerk who cannot unpack a case of goods and arrange them on the shelves carefully and neatly cannot take an order straight or fill it properly. Careless in one duty, he will be careless in another. Such clerks are more likely to be sitting on the counter, complaining of small wages than the more up-to-date clerks.

To be faithful in small things includes the proper tying of parcels. Make them neat and secure. Make them as attractive as possible. This counts with the customer.

Study the trade and try to please them, cranks and all. Remember that every crank has a soft spot. Try to reach it. Ask yourself: "Am I selling my trade all of the goods they use,? If not, why not ?" Then go after the business. If you have all of Mrs. S——'s trade but the butter and coffee she uses, endeavor to get that. You may be able to please the first twenty of your customers every time. The twenty-first may be the crank which all of the other clerks dodge. Once you get the crank with you, a big point has been gained. Hold your temper. Be serene if the crank gets mad. Slide around the rough corners in his or her makeup. Don't argue.

Sell goods to those customers who pay promptly. Take orders from those who have a big balance left on the books each month. Never tire presenting the merits of your lines to the gilt-edged customers. That is the fertile soil in which your trade will grow into dividends.—Retail Grocers' Advocate.

THE WOMAN CLERK'S SUCCESS.

The woman grocery clerk is gradually but surely finding her way into the ranks. The matter is one that merits the attention of clerks of the male persuasion and the stories of the experience of a couple of grocers, given herewith will be valuable as a suggestion of how they can make themselves more valuable.

A correspondent in St. John, N.B., discussing the matter, says:

"A few years ago lady clerks were practically unknown in the grocery stores of St. John, N.B., now a majority of the merchants have young ladies for bookkeepers or cashiers, and in at least one instance the chief clerk is a lady. Walter Gilbert, who conducts one of the largest retail grocery establishments of St. John, on the corner of Charlotte and Princess Streets, right in the business district, is a firm believer in the superiority of the female clerk over the male.

"They are much neater in appearance and are quicker and more trustworthy," he claims. "I have had a young lady working for me for the past year," he said, some time ago, "and I do not hesitate to say that she can put up orders as fast as any male clerk in the city. Of course, it is necessary to have young men, too, for the heavier work, but I find I get better results in having young ladies attend to the wants of my customers and in putting up orders than I did with men.

"I have just engaged another lady clerk," said Mr. Gilbert, "and while she has hardly got into the swing of things yet, I expect she will make good."

"One feature of the young ladies as clerks is that they are more dependable than men. If they are away for a holiday you can at least be sure they will come to work the following day prepared for work, and not looking as if they had been on a spree. Then, again, they have not as many temptations as a young man, not so many engagements or so many ways to spend their time and money. They are not always looking at the clock to see when closing time is, either, and in lots of ways they are preferable.

"I think, also, that they take more interest in keeping a store looking clean and bright and are more tasty in decorating.

"It has been my experience also that they are better at making sales. For instance, if I get a new line of goods in and want it introduced, the young ladies will sell more of it than two or three young men would. For my part, the young lady clerks have come to stay."

Godfrey Wolf, vice-president of the St. Louis Grocers' Association, has the following to say on the same subject:

"I am surprised that more grocers do not employ young women in their stores, I have tried it with excellent results. I find that a girl clerk can handle the cash and look after the books better than a man will and she is also extremely useful in waiting on trade, if she is interested in the business.

"When waiting on trade a woman clerk is at her best. She is invariably polite and attentive, and I find that women customers like to have a woman wait on them. The woman clerk naturally has a knowledge of cooking, and she talks over ways of cooking foods in such a manner as to interest the customer, and in that way she frequently makes sales that a man clerk would miss.

"A woman clerk has no bad habits. She is apt to be honest. She does not smoke cigarettes or drink when the boss is out. She also saves a good deal for the merchant from the fact that she does not smoke, because, not liking cigars or cigarettes, she does not help herself to the stock.

"A woman about a grocery store raises the tone. She prevents by her presence roughness, ill manners, and dirt. The average woman has a horror of dirty floors or counters or scales or bins, and her complaint about such things will lead to their being cleaned. A woman about a store is in fact a bit of brightness, who is bound to keep her place."

FACTS ABOUT GROCERIES

Information for Grocers and Clerks About the Goods They Hand Over the Counter.

The development of the rice industry goes on rapidly in British Guiana. As we have sometimes stated to our readers in this journal, Demerara is spoken of out there as a great mud flat. The discharges of the floods of the Orinoco River seem to have accumulated these great flats along the northwest coast of South America. Under Dutch domination and, thus far, under English domination, the chief production of British Guiana has been sugar. Latterly, quite a mining business has sprung up in the mountainous region far up in the interior of British Guiana and quite a quantity of gold has been brought out. The sugar industry, however, remains the dominant industry, but the large East Indian population who have worked out their indentures and are now free laborers in the country, seem to have taken very kindly to raising rice on the flat lands of Guiana and they are exercising all of the intense culture that they were taught to practice in rice culture at home. In a recent issue of the Demerara Chronicle it is stated that in one section, known as the Corentyne Coast, some 1,300 laborers are engaged in planting rice, the idea being to get in as early a crop as possible. In addition these and laborers employed in other localities, such as Canje, East Bank, Berbice River and on the West Coast, there are many laborers engaged in the same work and it is estimated that there are as many as 3,600 East Indian and negro rice cultivators now actively engaged in the work.

The Legend of the Salmon.

The Arabs of upper Egypt tell us why all flat fish are white on one side and brown on the other. Moses, like the other Israelites, was very fond of fish, and, as a rule, he cooked it splendidly, says an exchange. He had cooked a sole only on one side, when his fire went out, so he angrily threw the half-broiled fish into the sea. But this fish happened to live, and that is why all its descendants appear to be half cooked.

Upon the back of the haddock are strange imprints, said to be the work of the devil. On the Yorkshire coast, in England, they say the evil one long ago determined to build a bridge at Filey. This he did for no good purpose, but for the destruction of ships and sailors and the annoyance of fishermen. While at work he dropped his hammer into the sea. As he hastily picked it up he grasped a haddock at the same time; so the haddock carries the imprint of his fingers to this day.

But the legend of the salmon, told by the Scandinavian fisherfolk, is the most interesting of these tales. Would you like to know how the salmon came to have such a delicate tail? Here is the story:

Loki, the mischief-maker among the gods, had offended Thor greviously. In fact, he had stolen the mighty hammer which was Thor's most precious possession.

You may know that Loki fled as swiftly as he could when he found that Thor was in pursuit. But Thor was not minded to let the rascal escape, so he followed after, his wrath increasing with every stride.

At last, finding his enemy close upon his heels, Loki ran toward the water and leaped in, turning himself into a salmon. Thor, however, was so close behind that he caught the fish by the tail. For punishment he squeezed it so hard that ever after the tail of the salmon has been fine and thin.

The Evolution of Food.

What would be the sensations of one of our ancestors if he could sit down to a modern breakfast table? asks an ingenious student of old manners in the current Harper's Weekly. "To begin with fruits," he answers, "these were almost unknown to the menu of his period; certainly in their present form. So were most of our vegetables. The only vegetable which seems to be more or less indigenous over the greater part of the world is the squash-pumpkin tribe. The pumpkin is very ancient, for it dates back to Cinderella. Of course, he knew the small wild cherry, with its bitter flavor, the little wild strawberry, the raspberry, blackberry and plum. Apples, or 'crabs,' as Shakespeare calls them, were used in England, and generally roasted in order to deprive them of their astringency. The wild hedge orange of China and India filtered into Europe occasionally, but it was scarcely eatable. Potatoes were, of course, unknown. Bananas were introduced in quantity to Europe within the lifetime of many middle-aged men. The grape fruit is the product of the past two decades, and even yet has seldom crossed the Atlantic. The peach was a poisonous shrub in Persia. Our worthy ancestor, then, broke his fast upon salt fish, or meat, if he were wealthy, or had access to some deer forest. He washed down his food with hot beer, spiced, or honey brew."

THE PEDDLER NUISANCE.

If a canvass of housekeepers of this city were taken it would be found, we believe, that very few of the customers of the peddlers of tea, coffee, butter, eggs, fruits, vegetables, fish and other food products really approve of the practice of buying goods at their doors, as the practice is most annoying in respect of the labor it entails upon some member or members of each household in answer to the summons at the door many times a day. Even the people who buy goods at the door are among the complainants because of the practice, but it is natural that they should take advantage of the opportunity to buy a necessary article when they have already gone to the trouble of answering the summons of the bell. Still, as we have already pointed out, the housekeepers in nearly all neighborhoods would gladly do without the peddlers' services, provided they could insure themselves against a continuation of a custom which has grown into a literal nuisance in some parts of this city, and probably in other cities also.

Whatever the grocers can do towards forcing the peddlers out of business would be heartily welcomed by many over-worked women of this city, housewives and servants, for although early purchases of peddlers' wares sometimes seem to show something of the nature of a real bargain, the later ones are apt to cause the purchaser to reflect that she could have done better at the grocer's.

Legislation may offer promise of some relief, but the grocer could do better by calling upon his own resources, and by bringing all customers to the store, or by providing the order clerks with samples of goods, so fill the wants of the neighborhood before the peddlers make their calls as to leave the latter no opportunity to make sales.

It is possible to get customers to the store by holding out sufficient inducements. It is possible to provide the order clerk with samples of the things that are usually bought at the door from peddlers.

That the neglect of customers to regularly visit the grocer is a serious evil and an old evil, cannot be denied, but when their wants are so generally supplied by peddlers, who would ring the bell and cause a visit to the door anyway, no one can be surprised that his neglect is so common.

We are acquainted with grocers who provide for the wants of housekeepers who can only visit the store late in the day, by setting aside some of the choicest fruits and vegetables in order that the late comers may have an equal chance with early customers to get first-class specimens, and not be forced to take the leavings of the early comers, and in this manner these dealers protect themselves to some extent against the peddling fraternity, so far as fruits and vegetables are concerned.

Grocers who find that customers are buying tea, coffee or butter elsewhere, and probably from a peddler, are trying the efficacy of this plan: They learn what the customer's taste is, and, obtaining a special blend or a special creamery make, they send a sample to the customer until they get something that suits, and, as they have no difficulty in meeting the peddler's price, they get back the trade that has been lost to the grocer fraternity. Eggs are subject to the same treatment. Grocers are better able to suit the public's varying tastes than the peddlers are, for the latter do not carry as large an assortment as a rule, nor have they often as good facilities for obtaining a uniform quality, a point which is of prime importance in regard to the products mentioned.—Merchants' Review.

RISING SUN STOVE POLISH IN CAKES

SUN PASTE STOVE POLISH IN TINS

Chicago may follow example set in New York where manufacture and sale of inflammable and explosive liquid stove polishes is forbidden on account of the dangerous nature of this material when used by housekeepers.

A recommendation has been introduced into Chicago City Council calling attention to repeated accidents and a recent horrible death in Chicago from this cause and calling attention also to protection from like accidents, secured by ordinance in New York City.

Push RISING SUN Stove Polish and SUN PASTE Stove Polish which are always safe in the hands of the user. They please the housekeeper too. Good profit in them besides.

Allison Coupon Books are as popular with the patrons of a store as they are with the manager of the store himself. They work to the advantage of both, and by reducing friction enable you to secure new trade and hold the old.

Here is the Plan

If a man wants credit for $10.00 and you think he is good for it, give him a $10.00 Allison coupon book and have him sign the receipt or note form in front of book, which you tear out and keep. Charge him with $10.00—no trouble. When he buys a dime's worth, tear off a ten-cent coupon, and so on until the book is used up. Then he pays the $10.00 and gets another book. No pass books, no charging, no lost time, no errors, no disputes. Allison Coupon Books are recognized everywhere as the best.

Profit, Popularity, Permanent Success

These are the invariable results of selling only the most satisfactory goods. You know very well that customers soon begin to fall away when the quality of your goods begins to deteriorate. High quality is undoubtedly the main factor in permanently big success. In your canned fruit and vegetable department it will pay you to specialize on because Old Homestead goods are uniformly high in quality. We would not iterate and reiterate this statement if we were unable to show proof.

Old Homestead Brand

Every Can is a Confirmation of our quality claims. We entered the canned goods business to STAY; and we know that high quality alone can retain our prestige.

ONE MOMENT PLEASE!

Undoubtedly at some time it has been your misfortune to have bought tea that neither came up to your expectations nor brought you the quick returns necessary to give you a profit. It was a disappointment because the tea itself was of inferior quality, it lacked the very feature necessary to merit the confidence of your customers. You relied upon the recommendation of the salesman rather than upon your own judgement based upon a careful investigation of facts. In offering to you, we do not ask you to rely on unsupported argument. We point to seventeen years of continuously increasing sales. We refer you to millions of satisfied customers. For seventeen years we have adhered steadfastly to our principle of

The Canadian Grocer's Christmas Competitions

Window Dressing Contest

With a view to helping our subscribers and to show what may be done along the lines of special Christmas Display, The Canadian Grocer again this year, offers prizes for a Window Dressing Contest.

Following last year's precedent, which proved so successful, contestants will be divided into two classes:

1. Grocers and Grocery Clerks in city stores.
2. Grocers and Grocery Clerks in the country districts.

Prizes of $7.00 and $3.00

First and Second, respectively, are offered in each class, $20 in all.

All that is necessary to enter the contest is to send a fair-sized photo of one or more of your Christmas windows, with a description of it and name of the person who is responsible for the display, to us. The contest will close on December 31st.

Address the photo to "Editor, Canadian Grocer" and mark it "Christmas Window Dressing Contest."

Advertising Contest

A regular department in this paper is devoted to advertising for grocers, telling them how to advertise and emphasizing the fact that their local newspapers are the best medium for this purpose. To find out what effect these articles have had and to further stimulate the use of this method, which we consider most important for grocers, a Christmas advertisement contest has been arranged.

Prize of $5.00

Most up-to-date grocers, even some who use newspaper space at no other time of the year, do so at the Christmas season with a view to booming holiday trade. We want to get copies of these advertisements. The advertisement submitted should be about groceries, confectionery, etc., for the holiday season. All that is necessary is to forward one or more clippings from your local paper to us, with the name of the writer of the advertisement. The award will be made by an advertising specialist and will be announced, with a reproduction of the prize ad., shortly after the close of the contest. The last day for receipt of ads. is December 31st.

Address advertisements to "Editor, Canadian Grocer," marked "Advertising Contest."

A GOOD LINE

There is a "want more" fascination in H.P. Sauce that is crowding English Grocery Stores, and the Sauce is replacing the older ones on the best tables.

Judging from its reception the Canadian Grocer sees in H.P. a truly good thing in Sauce lines.

Our bright advertising here will send you the customers. Brisk sales—liberal profit—in H.P.

Vancouver Pure Food Show

A Most Successful Exhibition of Groceries Held Recently Under the Auspices of the City Retail Grocers' Association—Splendid Showing of Goods Manufactured in Western Canada—Description and Illustration of the Exhibits.

No pure food show could have more of a success than that recently held in Vancouver. The event was the second of the kind, and though much was hoped for, expectations never anticipated the success that attended the efforts of the promoters. The show was held in the Dominion Hall on Pender St., and the floor space was taken by twenty-one stalls, leaving just room enough for the passage of the large number of visitors.

The show was held under the auspices of the Vancouver Retail Grocers' Association, the secretary, W. J. C. Hunter, being in charge, while H. Perkins was designer and builder. The design was worked out in white and gold, the booths being of white, while the lettering was yellow, giving a very tasteful decorative combination. In point of attendance, the different exhibitors were exceedingly well pleased. Every afternoon and night hundreds paid the ten-cent admission, and at times the crowd on the floor was so great that it was only with difficulty that people could get around. As an instance, one exhibitor stated that they provided cardboard carriers for a city with 200,000 of a population, so great was the call. The people were so well pleased with the quality of the different products that each manufacturer or agent filled several order books with addresses of people who wanted more than samples. Too many of those who attended, the great variety of home-produced goods was a revelation, and it is safe to say that no better advertisement could have been secured.

VANCOUVER PURE FOOD SHOW—Exhibit of the B.C. Sugar Refining Co.

The exhibit of the B.C. Sugar Refinery was the finest in the hall. It occupied an octagon immediately in front of the entrance, and attracted considerable attention because of its artistic arrangement, the credit for which was due to A. McKelvie. The booth must have cost $500, while the value of sugar displayed amounted to $1,000. All grades were shown, including samples of the different stages of manufacture from the golden syrup extracted from the cane, on through the four grades of yellow sugar to the granulated, Paris lumps, powdered fruit and bar sugar, up to the latest triumph of the refiner's art, the sugar diamonds. The product was shown in all the standard commercial packages in which it was sold ranging from barrels to the dainty two-pound cartons of lumps and diamonds. A neatly printed cook book was distributed, and over 5,000 copies were given away.

Another octagon was occupied by the Aylmer Condensed Milk Co., which is represented locally by Wilson & McIntosh, Mr. McIntosh being in charge. This was a close second to that of the B.C. Sugar Refinery Company. There was a great array of Canada First Brand evaporated cream, which has been sold in the city only during the last six months. It was served to the patrons in cocoa cups, and the repeated calls were evidence of the greater popularity of this well-known article. Not only this exhibitor, but all were very liberal in dispensing samples of the products.

Red Gate coffee and tea was also in demand. Young Bros., of Seattle and Vancouver, were the exhibitors, Mr. Griffin being in charge. This was gotten up well artistically and was specially attractive.

The Genesee Pure Food Company, which makes a specialty of Jello-O, was one of the sought-for exhibits. They handed out neat cardboard carriers, which were used by the ladies in which to store the many samples they received from the different booths. The first supply soon became exhausted, and when the number was totalled up, the exhibitors were more than surprised that such a large number should have been called for.

Kelly, Douglas & Co. specialize the famous Nabob teas and coffees. This firm had a large corner booth, which gave ample space for attractive display, and it was used to the very best advantage.

The Vancouver Milling & Grain Company had the reputation of being the only flour mill on the Pacific Coast to have Canadian flour displayed. This is Vancouver's industry, and a ton and a half of flour was pyramided to show what is being done. Tea biscuits, etc., made from the firm's flour were offered, and the booth was patronized very liberally. Will Hill was in charge and had a busy time.

Braid's best coffee was the specialty in the booth of Wm. Braid & Co., the exhibit being in charge of Mr. Beveridge, jr. This was another favorite corner.

Cross & Co., soda water manufacturers, made up in the beauty of their exhibit what it lacked in size.

The Brackman-Ker Milling Co. makes the statement that their goods are the best in the world, and they did much effective work in backing this up by their exhibit. The celebrated B. & K. products were much in evidence.

Mr. Smith, who was in charge of the display of M. R. Smith & Co., biscuit and confectionery manufacturers, of Victoria, expressed himself as very well pleased with results. This firm is the oldest of its kind in the west, and that it has been successful is unnecessary to state when it is known they have been in business for fifty years. They supplied biscuits for the Beaver, the first steamer to ply on the Pacific, and they now supply this article to the Princess Victoria, the fastest passenger boat on the western ocean.

The fruit products of the Chilliwack Canning and Preserving Company, were the central display in the booth of Little Bros. These products comprised everything in fruit, and the number of lines was quite a surprise. In this attractive and successful exhibit, good space was also given to the biscuit lines put up by the Perrin Co., which firm the Little Bros. represent here.

Great pains were taken in the arrangement of the display of Knowler & Macauley, who had the G.B. chocolates very tastefully set out. This is an Eastern Canada product, and the many who secured samples discovered that the quality was exceedingly fine.

The Dominion Biscuit Co. (Ramsay Bros.) had a special attraction in the centre of their biscuit and candy products. This was a large stick of candy, such as used to hang in the shop windows about Christmas time when we were boys. To Miss Irene Falconer, who guessed within a quarter of an ounce what this weighed, was given a handsome prize. She put the weight at twenty pound six ounces.

The Western Canada Flour Mills Company attracted attention in a special way also. This was by offering 3 sacks of flour every night free. Coupons were given each applicant, and the drawing took place in the evening. Needless to say there were many ladies on hand, and the contest was conducted in such a way as to give thorough satisfaction.

To the woman who made the best bread from their flour, the Calgary Milling Company offered a fine prize. This concern went to special pains to bring their product before the many housewives who attended the show and that they are pleased indicates that the demonstration was noticed by the many who crowded round the booth.

One did not need to be told that the Empress Manufacturing Company was the oldest established house of its kind in Vancouver, when it was observed how many stood around their exhibit. This firm's coffee, spices, jams, etc., are very well-known, and the old saying about a man having no honor in his own country did not apply. The Empress Company not only has honor but has a material success, and made quite a hit on this occasion.

Bromley's coffee essence and monarch teas were the specials in the display of W. J. McMillan & Company. This booth came in for its share of attention.

Hams and bacon are not the articles to lend themselves to the most attractive display, yet B. Wilson & Co., of Victoria managed to so arrange a liberal supply of them as to attract the constant flow of people. It was an eye-opener to many that these were manufactured so close to home, and of a quality that makes good sales.

The Burnside Gas Appliance Company displayed gas ranges, which are a necessity to modern cooking, not only for results but for convenience.

The space at the doorway was taken up by the King Studio, which had photos of many kinds and sizes arranged in an attractive way.

The death occurred last week of W. E. Roxburgh, a prominent citizen of Norwood. Mr. Roxburgh has for many years been a grain buyer in that village and during his career has been actively connected with the East Peterborough Agricultural Society and the Norwood Board of Education. He was 74 years of age.

VANCOUVER.

October 31.—This is the season when butter and egg prices take unto themselves wings and soar into the higher altitudes. Representatives of the Alberta creameries are around this week to get orders so that they may be booked in before the first of the month, when, they say, an increase will be made in the price, when it will go to 31c or 32c wholesale. Fresh local creamery sells a little higher. The real good eggs, for there are several grades available, bring 50c a dozen in the stores, and are scarce at that. Private sellers who deliver guaranteed eggs ask 55c and get it without trouble, as the demand is greater than the supply.

The products of the Lea Pickling & Preserving Company, of Simcoe, Ont., are making a good impression with the retailers, where they have been more in evidence during the past few weeks than before. They have a number of lines, but their chow-chow, a mustard mixture, is meeting with particular favor.

Something new on the market here is breakfast and cream cheese, put up by the Ford Produce Company, of Bellingham, Wash. It arrives in quarters, halves and pounds, but the bigger sizes have not much call. The quarters sell at 10c, the Ford Company allowing for the duty.

Malaga grapes have arrived from Spain via Liverpool. There is a good demand for this favorite article in Vancouver for the Christmas trade.

Potatoes are cheap this fall, owing to the greater number grown. Lulu Island product brings about 80c a sack, while the genuine Ashcrofts, for like all good articles, others are now called Ashcrofts, are worth in instances $1,25. The potatoes grown in the fine soil of the dry belt in British Columbia are unequalled, but there are other good ones grown in the higher land on the coast, where there is little rain in summer. Lulu Island is very low-lying, which makes its potato crop wet.

A visitor to Vancouver the other day was C. E. Edmonds, secretary-treasurer of the well-known firm of Christie, Brown & Co., biscuit manufacturers, of Toronto. He is a native of Biddeford, Devonshire, which he left 36 years ago, and found many from that place in Vancouver, where they have a Devon and Cornwall Club. He has been with Christie, Brown & Co. for 30 years.

Several changes have taken place recently in businesses. At Central Park, half way between this city and New Westminster, Fran & Westover, of Vancouver, have purchased the general store of A. C. Ford & Co., which will be managed by Mr. Cleveland; M. D. Forman, of East Collingwood, has been bought out by W. L. Carley & Son, recent arrivals from Manitoba. The new firm has erected a large new store.

Thomas Twedell, chairman of the buying department of the Co-operative Wholesale Society, of England, accompanied by Thomas Killon, Thomas Broderick, secretary, and A. L. Lobb, of Manchester, business associates, are on the coast. Mr. Twedell stated that their business in Canada was to study business conditions and make contracts. As the society's purchases were growing in British Columbia, a buying agent would likely be appointed with headquarters in Vancouver. This society supplies 3,000 retail stores in the British Isles and has been in existence for 60 years. A score of factories is owned, and Canadian wheat is used in its milling business, which is the largest in England.

The B. C. Fisheries, Cold Storage and Fertilizer Company has been organized by Capt. L. P. Bowler, of London, to do business in northern waters. Trawls will be used, and operations will be on an extensive scale.

Lill e & Hooper, of Chilliwack, have decided to close out their men's furnishings, dry goods and shoes and devote their entire attention to their groceries. The store will be remodelled and the stock enlarged.

J. A. Fraser, for many years manager of the James Reid Estate, at Quesnel, Cariboo, has started the construction of a store at Quesnel.

A. W. Angus, who conducted a bakery and grocery at Peachland, has been burned out. As there is no fire apparatus there, everything was burned. Insurance was carried, though not to a very large amount.

B. Wilson & Co., produce and commission merchants, Victoria, have started the construction of one of the finest manufacturing and general business houses in the capital city. It will be three storeys high, and will cost $100,000. It will be used for cold storage purposes entirely, and will be equipped with machinery brought from Scotland.

SASKATOON

November 2.—Clare & Little have decided to erect a track warehouse 60x66 feet, in which to handle their commission business.

The A. Macdonald Co., wholesale grocers, are now doing business in their new warehouse, although it is not yet quite completed.

J. F. Cairns, the proprietor of the big Second Avenue departmental store, has announced to his numerous customers and the general public that on and after November 2nd he will conduct his business on a cash basis only. In the past credit was given in plenty, but a new policy has been adopted in order to conduct the business on thoroughly up to date lines. In connection with the change a deposit account system will be inaugurated, and those who wish to carry on a credit balance may make a deposit at the office against which goods subsequently purchased will be charged.

ST. JOHN.

Nov. 2.—The wholesalers report business very good. One dealer said that up to Oct. 26 his firm was about $2,000 ahead of the whole of October last year. This was accounted for to some extent by the heavy sales of flour. Many of the storekeepers had put off buying anticipating lower prices and lately when stocks ran low and prices remained unchanged the sales had been unusually heavy. The general opinion is that prices will not be any less than they now are, for at least a couple of months. Manitoba flours are quoted today at $6.60, whereas the price at this time last year was $6.75. Ontario's are selling at $5.50 as compared with $6.10 last year. The dealers contend that there is too great a difference in the price of Manitoba's and Ontario's to-day, as there is not such a difference in quality and the prices of Ontario's are expected to go higher.

Oatmeal has declined 25 cents a barrel in the past week and cornmeal is a little easier. When the new crop of corn is ready to grind lower prices are expected.

Sugar declined 10 cents per hundred pounds on the 8th ult., but advanced again to the old price on the 23rd, owing to reports of drought and frost in Germany. On the 27th the market lost the ten cent gain that had been made four days before as more favorable conditions prevailed. The refiners are continuing the see-saw game they have been playing with sugar all through the present year and it is difficult to tell which way the market will turn next. The price to-day for granulated sugar is $4.70 to $4.80 and for yellows $4.20 to $4.60.

Fancy Barbadoes molasses has been advanced another cent owing to the strength of the market and a further advance is looked for before the end of the year. Present prices are: Puncheons, 39c; tierces, 41c; barrels, 42c.

Mess pork is considerably lower than clear and clear backs, in consequence of which there is a larger demand for this grade. Lard declined a half-cent recently but it has again advanced to the old figures. Tubs are quoted at 14½c and pails at 14½c now, but an advance is likely. The high price of pure lard has been the means of increasing the consumption of compound.

Dried fruits and nuts for fall delivery are receiving attention now. Some peels, raisins and figs have been received but the bulk of these goods is still to come. Prices on these lines will be lower than last year.

In the produce market, butter keeps scarce and unseasonably high. This may be partly due to the fact that large quantities are now stored in the cold storage warehouses here and in Sussex, but, of course, the nature of the season has a good deal to do with it. Some dealers claim that there is not as much butter made in this province as formerly, many of the farmers sending their cream to the city, where they get just as good a price as they do for turning it into butter. Wholesale prices now are from 26c to 29c a pound. Eggs are reported plentiful owing to the mild weather and they are fairly cheap about 19c or 20c being asked. Many thousand dozens are stored in the cold storage warehouses.

Potatoes are plentiful and are quoted at $1.25 to $1.40 a barrel. Apples are quoted at $1.50 to $2.50 for good stock.

The supply is good and the quality excellent.

There have been no great changes in the fish market, herrings are reported scarcer than they were ever known to be.

Collections are reported to be rather backward. Cash is short owing to the poor lumber business this year which has not circulated as much money as usual.

According to estimates furnished by the largest potato shippers, at Fredericton, there have been upwards of 15,000 barrels of potatoes shipped from that city this season already. Of this amount about 12,000 barrels have been shipped by the C.P.R. to Upper Canadian markets, largely to points in the province of Quebec, while about 3,000 barrels have been shipped by water to St. John for shipment from there to Cuba. In all at least sixty cars of potatoes have left for Upper Canadian markets. These shipments by far eclipse all records for former years. The yield of potatoes in that vicinity this year has averaged about 100 barrels to the acre, and the price paid by shippers has ranged from 85c to $1 per barrel.

The St. John, Boston and Cuba steam ship line, which has been operated now for about three months, has opened up a new market for the farmers of New Brunswick. The shipments from this port to Cuba have increased about 700 per cent. since the service was inaugurated. One steamer has been in use thus far but the company is so well pleased with the results attained that in December two steamers will be put on. The next steamer, when it sails on Nov. 16th, will carry away a full cargo consisting of oats, hay, fish, potatoes, lumber, etc. The steamship people say the Cuban merchants are well satisfied with the shipments from St. John and the products of New Brunswick are now quite in demand.

Experts are now at work at the salmon pond at Little River, stripping the 1,400 salmon in captivity there, of their spawn. Last year five million eggs were secured and this year it is expected about seven million will be secured. The eggs are sent to the various hatcheries in the province.

HALIFAX.

November 2.—Now that the elections are over business is brightening up a little, but it is very slow. Various causes are assigned for the dulness, and many attribute it to the high prices. Generally speaking, times appear to be good in the Maritime Provinces, especially so in Nova Scotia, where all the large industries are running on full time and the miners have plenty of work. Of course the weather is rather unseasonable for the time of the year, and people taking advantage of these conditions are not buying very extensively at the present time. The mild weather has not been of any great benefit to the trade.

The farmers are holding their butter back for higher prices, and, as a consequence, the market is almost bare of dairy stock. Good dairy butter is worth about 24 cents, and creamery from 26c to 27c. The cheese making season is now about over, and this will aid very materially in increasing the supply of butter. Sales of butter are restricted by the poor quality of most of the stock offered, and the price asked for it. The general opinion is that there is plenty of butter, but that it is being held back.

Stocks of molasses here are diminishing rapidly and those who have any large quantity on hand are not over anxious to dispose of it. The price at the present time is very firm and it has a tendency to advance. Prices quoted by jobbers are as follows:

Fancy Barbadoes, 39c to 40c; extra choice Porto Rico, 38c; Barbadoes, 33c to 34c; fancy Trinidad, 38c.

Trade in sugar here at the present time is quite brisk. This may be attributed in a measure to the fact that the confectionery manufacturers are now preparing their goods for Christmas, hence the increase in consumption. While speaking of matters relating to sugar, I may say that there is considerable interest here in the Wholesale Grocers' trial that is now in progress in Toronto. The evidence showing how the trade arranges prices furnishes quite interesting reading.

On Monday next there will go forward from various parts of Hants, Kings and Annapolis Counties to London, Eng., the finest shipment of exhibition fruit from Nova Scotia that has yet been forwarded. This fruit is to be exhibited first at the Royal Horticultural show on Nov. 26 and 27, where it will be shown in competition with fruit from British Columbia, Ontario and the various British Colonies in other parts of the world. Last year a good exhibit was forwarded, which stood second only to British Columbia. The present exhibit, however, is quite superior to that of last year. The exhibit is such a magnificent one that it is felt that the palm of victory will fall to the fruit growers of Nova Scotia. The outstanding feature of this exhibit is a collection of 150 varieties of apples prepared by H. Dalmaine, of Wolfville, who has collected the finest fruit in the Valley. Some fifteen to twenty of the best fruit growers in the province have contributed to the collection of boxed fruits, of which some three hundred boxes will be shipped. Their fruit will be shown both individually, in private competition and collectively, as the Nova Scotia Government exhibit. Last year some twelve local fruit growers received medals, in addition to the one awarded to the Nova Scotia Government. Beside the collection of fresh fruits, there will also be forwarded some 200 jars of preserved fruits, such as strawberries, raspberries, gooseberries, currants, plums, cherries, etc.

Fire at St. John's, Nfld., on Monday, Oct. 26, destroyed the big warehouse of Baird, Gordon & Co., containing 100,000 quintals of codfish, the grocery store of James C. Baird and several other buildings. The loss is $750,000, with insurance totalling $283,800.

MONTREAL.

Nov. 3.—J. H. Davis, representative of P. MacIntosh & Co., Toronto, has been out of town for a few days visiting Valleyfield and other points in Huntingdon, in the interests of his firm.

Kennedy Bros., retail tea and coffee merchants, have opened a store at 231 Maisonneuve St.

The many provision stores throughout the city are presenting an exceptionally fine line of show windows this week. The vari-colored products which they sell makes the construction of attractive windows possible, especially when this fact is coupled with some artistic talent.

J. A. Richer, who has been the manager of Scroggies' grocery department has resigned and has been succeeded by J. H. Bright. Mr. Bright is a man of considerable experience in the grocery business which will insure his success.

Norman Stoddard, of the Stoddard Bedding Co., St. Catherine St. west, who is one of Montreal's prominent younger business man, expressed his surprise when presented with the "Coming of Age" number of The Grocer. Mr. Stoddard started his business career as a general merchant in Delhi, Ont., and was a subscriber to The Grocer eighteen years ago.

PETERBORO.

Nov. 3.—This week has seen the last of the manufacturing of cheese in the factories of the country and it may be expected that the price of butter will take a drop. For some time now it has been selling on the market and at the various stores at 30c per pound. Many of the cheese factories will continue to operate but butter will be the product and not cheese.

Burglars visited Indian River a few nights ago and entered the general store of Walter H. Kidd, from which they secured between twenty and thirty dollars worth of goods. The following morning the owner discovered missing about seven pounds of tobacco, one and a half boxes of cigars, three pairs of fine boots, some underwear, a dozen and a half towels a couple of pairs of trousers and two fedora hats. The post office and the grocery departments were undisturbed owing, it is thought, to the frightening away of the robbers by the barking of Mr. Kidd's dogs. A warrant is out for the arrest of a suspect who was seen in that district the preceding day.

While the grocery trade in Peterboro has maintained a pretty fair average during the past season, the prospects for the next few months seem to assume a much more active condition. Judging by the heavy receipts of merchandise arriving at the various wholesale warehouses in the city the proprietors expect an active trade. The varieties of new goods include raisins, currants, preserved, evaporated and dried fruits, syrups, molasses, nuts, sugar, etc., which indicates that Christmas lies in the no-distant future.

The general grocery store at the corner of McDonel and Water Sts. has been sold by Mrs. M. A. Anderson to T. C. Young.

R. C. Braund, a prominent city grocer, is spending a couple of weeks in the north hunting deer.

LONDON.

November 3.—Grocery trade is fair, Saturday having been a busy day with retailers, despite the disagreeable weather.

Joseph Peaslee has sold out his grocery business at the corner of Richmond and Maple Streets, to Mrs. Armstrong, from whom he purchased it six months ago.

W. E. Murdy, Hamilton Road and Hill Street, has disposed of his grocery business and residence to E. D. McRoberts, of London Junction.

The fact that the fixed assessment of the McCormick Manufacturing Company, of $50,000, expires this year, and that hereafter the concern will be assessed in the ordinary way, gave rise to a rumor that the big candy and biscuit factory would be taken from London. It was learned, however, on inquiry that there is no truth in the report. Said the man who is in a position to know whereof he speaks:—"Of course, there has been some talk that the company would go to Stratford, Woodstock, Toronto, and other places, but there is nothing in that. They are up against many difficulties. There is a scarcity of female help in London. This is a very serious difficulty and handicaps the firm in its work. Then the building where they are is not suited to their needs; it is too high. They would prefer a building two storeys high, covering a much larger ground area than the present building. But even with these difficulties, the firm will not leave London, as they have too much money tied up to move out. If they could sell the property they might move out, but the chances are that if a purchaser were found for their building, they would rebuild in London. No, the McCormick Company will not leave London for a good long time yet."

Potatoes are a good average crop hereabouts and are selling at from 15c to 20c less per bag than this time last year. There will be plenty of fowl for both Thanksgiving and Christmas, farmers say, but they expect high prices. Apples will be very dear this Winter, while vegetables and roots will be reasonable.

CHATHAM.

November 3.—Now that the elections are over, the local retailers are getting together to look after their mutual interests. The next meeting of the Retail Merchants' Association will be held on the 10th, when that body will actively inaugurate the new season by taking up a number of matters of special interest to merchants.

Potatoes are plentiful just now, selling on the market last Saturday for 75c a bag. Butter sold at 25c a pound, and eggs at 25c a dozen.

T. O'Donnell, of Wallaceburg, has opened up a flour, feed and seed business in the store adjoining his grocery, formerly occupied by Jas. Quennell. Mr. O'Donnell has just purchased a handsome new delivery rig.

Since February 1, 1908, the Wallaceburg Sugar Company has imported 19,000 tons of raw sugar, and, according to a statement recently published, has paid $167,764 in duties.

James German, manager of the Ridgetown creamery during the past year, has returned to Beachville, Ont.

The general store of Nenson Emery at Tilbury was visited by fire on Saturday night, the stock being damaged to the extent of about $2,000. The loss is fully covered by insurance.

On Friday night burglars broke into the general store of Mrs. A. Hunter, at Charing Cross, taking a number of articles, as well as about $3 in cash. They are thought to be the same men who operated at Kent Bridge a short time previously.

canning factories in this district will largely exceed that of last year. Tomatoes were particularly plentiful, and other products suitable for canning were likewise abundant.

F. R. Gregory, the Leamington tobacco man, accompanied by James T. Farish, of Granby, Que., one of the directors of the Imperial Tobacco Co., was in this vicinity last week. Both are very optimistic regarding the outlook for tobacco in this vicinity, and are advising the growers to sow extensively next year. They state that tobacco equal to the best Southern States products has been grown in South Kent.

M. J. Hurley, the Wallaceburg grocer, has placed a handsome new delivery rig on the route.

An attempt was made to break into A. J. Brown's store at Comber last week.

Rural merchants have been much perturbed of late by the activity of the College of Pharmacy in suppressing the sale of drugs. Detective John B. Grant and his daughter have gone up and down the country, and a sale of ten cents' worth of quinine would inevitably result in the unfortunate merchant being haled before the magistrate and fined $20 and costs. Merchants in Palmyra, Guilds, Mull, Omry, Buxton and similar cross-roads towns, have been the usual among the farmers, who complain that the farmer living, it may be ten, twelve or fifteen miles from a drug store, cannot buy ten cents' worth of quinine to check a cold or a little cascara for family use from a merchant who sells him his groceries without the merchant being liable to a fine of $20 for the first offence and $50 for each subsequent offence. In most cases the drugs in question are purchased from pharmacists in Chatham and the surrounding larger towns. The rural merchants complain, and with a certain show of justice, that while the law is eager enough and powerful enough to fine them for selling ten cents' worth of quinine, it proved utterly powerless to cope with the professional burglars who terrorized the merchants of this district last spring.

GUELPH.

November 3.—The city council having refused to settle the costs of the butter case against the Chief of Police, the chief himself paid into the Division Court the amount, which was $10. This settles the case at present.

It has been whispered, "Why not have a grocer for mayor this year?" The finance chairman a year ago would fill the bill to a nicety, if he could be persuaded to let his name go to the people.

The Guelph Co-operative Association has bought a boot and shoe stock to add to its grocery and butcher business.

The annual report of the Guelph general hospital board is out and the grocers should notice the following: Tea and coffee, $167.15; butter, $1,070.45; bread and flour, $549.45; fish and fruit, $920.73; vegetables, $179.07; crockery, $81.93; groceries, $967.49; eggs, $452.17; meat and poultry, $1,578.91. You will notice with a small amount of poultry and smoked meats this would make an even $5,000. Now in years gone by it was the usual thing to give this account to each grocer that could handle it in turn, one month at a time, which, to my mind, is the proper idea, and could again be done by the grocers without much trouble. Then, again, as in some of the Government institutions, the tea, coffee and spices are given to one man, fish and fruit to another, etc. How much of that $5,000 did your store get last year, or do you expect to get this year? It is only fair you should get a share as well as your neighbor. If you will use your influence and draw the attention of the directors to it, you will receive it. There is not attention enough paid to these things by the grocers themselves and for that reason some do not share in it who have a perfect right to do. The Elliott Home, almost in connection with the hospital, and controlled also by nearly the same board of directors, who are all clever, level-headed business men, spent last year about $600, also making another nice little account worth looking after, and could be divided up in the same way. As I understand it, at present there is a tendency to cut prices, which is not at all necessary, as the grocers should arrange to have a uniform price themselves to protect each other.

Much sympathy is expressed for Chas. Barber, manager of O'Mara's, in the loss of $77 out of his till on Saturday morning. The store was left unguarded for a few minutes while the staff were unloading a shipment of meat from Palmerston. Grocers and others will do well to remember never to leave the store, not even to go down cellar, without some responsible person in charge.

The special number of The Grocer received a large number of bouquets from the grocers here.

November 2.—Alderman R. Simpson, of the R. & J. Simpson Co., wholesale grocers, has a motion to bring before the council to-night to have all the sidewalks cleaned of snow by a snowplough run by the city. Some of those fellows who live on corner lots will surely now call him "Blessed Bob.".

VANCOUVER PURE FOOD SHOW—Exhibit of the Western Canada Flour Mills.

Tea at $4 per pound is the latest and also the highest priced tea we remember of ever seeing advertised in Guelph. Geo. Williams is the lucky man to have nerve enough to tempt the taste of the connoisseurs of tea in this city. He had it advertised all week and no doubt sold some of it in small lots, 25c an ounce, and that makes 25 cups of tea. Does not seem so expensive after all, and makes a splendid advertisement, as very few people outside of the trade ever heard of such high-priced tea. The general prices of tea sold in Guelph stores run from 25c to 50c, with the 40c line the best seller.

Hallowe'en passed off very quietly in this city and as usual the snow apples, nuts and brown sugar were good sellers. That is one good quality of the grocery business. No matter what season comes or goes, the grocer is right in it with some good seller.

The big squash guessing contest as an advertisement by Jas. Herm & Son was closed this morning. The three squash weighed 570 lbs. and 570½ lbs. was the nearest guess. The prizes were 100, 50 and 25 lbs. of Five Roses flour. It was really quite a novelty. There were about 1,000 guesses all told.

Most of the window dressers in our local stores are putting more life into their windows lately, which is another good sign. The new canned goods and fruits may have given them a little more activity. We have some good windows here and there is nothing like keeping them up-to-date.

The market was again crowded with potatoes and apples on Saturday, with the usual scarcity of choice butter and fresh eggs.

GALT.

Nov. 3.—Trade in all lines has shown a decided increase during the past fortnight and the merchants are well pleased with the volumn of business being transacted. There are no specialties to be mentioned. The increase has been along all lines and indicates a return of prosperity which was so confidently expected.

The Christmas goods are beginning to arrive and already more than one merchant is considering and planning for his Christmas windows and displays. The merchants confidently expect a much better holiday trade than last season, although at that time business was considered satisfactory. The depression, however, was just beginning to make itself felt and on that account business suffered. At the present, however, the citizens seem to be confident of the future and for this reason many will venture expenditures which would otherwise be unconsidered. Malaga grapes, and assorted nuts are being offered. There is a large demand, particularly for the former, which are of an exceptionally fine quality.

Local merchants are dissatisfied with the decision of the town council to the effect that the license fees of peddlers and hawkers shall be reduced to $20 or ten cents per day. Formerly the license was $50 per year. The action of the council was due to a petition signed by 600 residents asking for the reduction on the ground that the high fee increased the price of produce. The reduction applies only to the hawkers of vegetables and fruits, so that only the grocers and fruit stores will be affected. It is quite probable that the Retail Merchants' Association may take action in the matter. It certainly does appear as if the grocers were being discriminated against in favor of the peddlers.

The store on Main Street being remodelled for the S. H. Knox Company, is nearly completed, and the store will probably be opened during the week of the 9th.

BRANTFORD.

Nov. 3.—The annual meeting of the Grocers' and Butchers' Association was held in the hall of the Bank of Hamilton Building last week. The reports showed that a very successful and prosperous year had just closed and everything undertaken during the year had been very successful, especially the excursion to Niagara Falls and the annual banquet. The following officers were re-elected for the ensuing year: President, Arthur Coulbeck; vice-president, Fred Corey; secretary, Norman Willitts; treasurer, A. L. Vanstone, executive committee, F. Corey, Misuer, J. Kew, A. L. Vanstone and H. Foulds. A number of the grocers are very enthusiastic bowlers and a lengthy discussion took place in regard to renting a suitable place and having it fixed up for bowling purposes next season, for the use of the grocers and clerks. They have in view a very desirable lot in the centre of the city and at their next meeting expect to come to some definite arrangements. A general committee was also named to act in connection with the proposed Grocers' Day in connection with the contemplated Old Boys' Reunion. It is said if the affair is to be held an effort will be made to have the annual Grocers' and Butchers' excursion run to Brantford instead of the Falls. There are a number of good books and periodicals published in regard to salesmanship and the grocery business window dressing, teas, coffees, advertising, and show card writing, etc., which would be very helpful to all who desire to develop and improve their talents, and it was suggested that the Association help in forming a library of this kind. After considerable discussion a committee was appointed to arrange a good programme for the next meeting on November 24th at which all clerks will be welcome, and if enough were interested in the movement something definite would be done in regard to starting a library. After the business of the Association was completed the president introduced James O'Hagan, associate editor of The Canadian Grocer, who is visiting the grocers of Western Ontario, who addressed the meeting.

A. COULBECK,

Re-elected President Brantford Grocers' and Butchers' Association.

Norman Willitts, the former Colborne Street grocer, who recently purchased half interest in the bakery business of Harry Pettit, deserves great credit for the new and up-to-date way in which they send out their goods. All cakes, rolls and also their home-made bread are wrapped in transparent paper and labeled. The quality is first-class and most of the grocers in the city are handling them.

ST. THOMAS.

November 3.—The city council did not lose any time in passing a new by-law reducing the peddlers' fee from $75 to $25 to meet the views of Police Magistrate Glenn, who seems to be opposed to any fee being imposed. It remains to be seen whether he will convict under the new by-law as above. The city has lost a lot of revenue from this source, and the merchants who are the heaviest taxpayers have to bear the greater burden, besides standing for the unjust competition thus engendered. A meeting of all the business men is called for Thursday evening to take action on the matter, and no doubt some more satisfactory means will be taken to have the law enforced.

Both markets were rather poorly attended on Saturday and prices in every line ranged unusually high. Eggs sold from 28c to 30c, and butter kept time with the eggs, selling at 30c. Fowl sold at more reasonable prices, good chickens from 30c to 40c each, and turkeys 15c lb. Apples sold from 75c to $1 per bag, and potatoes likewise. Other vegetables were in good supply and all were disposed of.

THE SPIRIT OF THANKSGIVING.

The sense of gratitude which in all well ordered minds and communities is ever present, should especially manifest itself on the day which the nation sets apart for returning thanks to The Giver of All Good, for the many blessings of the year.

Canadians, individually and collectively, have every reason to feel grateful for the measure of prosperity and happiness which they enjoy. In no other land at this season are social and industrial conditions more favorable, nor prospects more reassuring. True, we have come through a period of a few months in which there was depression in some lines and the feeling regarding the future was not overconfident; but the clouds have passed and an optimistic spirit once more prevails. There is no longer doubt, hesitancy or delay. Everything in the industrial and commercial world is again swinging in the direction of a prosperity and progressiveness that have characterized Canadian conditions generally for the last decade save for the few brief months when we stood shivering on the brink. Comparatively speaking, we have experienced no depression or stringency when the actual state of affairs in other countries has been revealed. Canada is not a land of extremes either in the way of massed wealth or conjested poverty, for which we should be thankful. This order of things has enabled us to withstand many temptations and to safely pass many a pitfall and snare. Great national undertakings to-day proclaim unbounded faith and confidence in the future. The temporary cessation in factory activity and the lull in mercantile life are vanishing and evidences of industrial revival are presented on every hand. A bountiful western harvest has materially contributed to a supreme trust in the future, increased buying, renewed activity and resumption of operations in every line. Business men, who, for a time, halted, are once more in step. Self reliance has replaced distrust and the vitalizing effect is felt in every vein of our commercial being. Hopeful in spirit, buoyant in disposition, and glowing in the full strength of financial health, the future is inviting and prospects were never more pleasing. On the eve of Thanksgiving Day, 1908, we find ourselves as citizens and business men in a pleasant frame of mind and, let us hope, in an appreciative and grateful mood.

In changing the day for national thanksgiving from a Thursday to a Monday the Federal authorities have shown proper and considerate regard for the great army of travelers, the nature of whose calling takes them away from their families many weeks and months in the year. These industrious representatives of Canada's great mercantile and manufacturing interests are now able to spend the day around their own firesides, surrounded by those nearest and dearest to them. The spirit of true thanksgiving has thus been fostered in thousands of Canadian homes, and we trust the expressions of gratitude will not be lost sight of but may manifest itself in generous thoughts, worthy acts and kindly deeds.

OUR CHRISTMAS COMPETITIONS.

With a view to stimulating interest in window display and in advertising for grocers, matters which are treated at some length in regular departments in this paper, The Grocer is again offering a series of prizes for a Christmas competition, similar to that conducted at the same time last year.

In the last window dressing contest somewhat of an innovation was introduced by dividing competitors into two classes, class 1 including those in the cities and larger towns, and class 2 those in the village and country stores. It was felt that this gave a fairer opportunity to all entrants by reason of the fact that the country stores in most cases have not the same call for decorative goods and some lines of distinctive Christmas supplies as those in the cities. This method proved so successful and satisfactory last year that it is being followed again in this year's contest. Two sets of prizes will be given to cover each class and grocers all over Canada are urged to enter the contest.

The Christmas advertising contest also awakened a good deal of interest last year and this also is being repeated along substantially the same lines. In this contest a prize will be given for the best advertisement of Christmas goods clipped from a local paper. Advertising is coming to be an important feature in most grocers' sales methods, and the idea of the contest is to help our subscribers to get better results in the advertising they are doing.

Further particulars regarding both contests will be found on another page of this issue.

SECURING LOYAL EMPLOYES.

Promote the good man and discharge the poor one.

The manager of a business who lives up to this plan of action will soon gather around him a bunch of people who will be loyal and can be depended upon no matter how great the pinch may be.

Your rival in business may have an especially good man in his employ who can be secured to your business by the offer of a higher salary, but will it pay you to pay him the price and bring him in over good men who have been loyal to you for years? Will not such a course put you in the position of hinting to all of your old employes that the loyalty of any salaried man belongs to the highest bidder for his immediate services, and induce him to figure with your rivals at the same time he is working for you?

Every real business manager realizes the fact that he must pay all he possibly can afford if he expects to keep a thoroughly competent working force, but many of them depend upon the pay alone to hold their men. There is much more to be thought of. The best men will in many cases work for less wages than they could command from other sources if they feel sure that their efforts will bring promotion. Good men are willing to prove themselves to be competent, and to wait for better things, if they feel sure they are not to be disappointed in the end, but bringing one new man in above them shatters all their confidence in a square deal, even if that new man happens to be the son of the manager, fresh from college, and long on athletic knowledge and short on business sense.

THE SITUATION IN THE WEST.

The Western Viewpoint, by our Special Correspondent.

Winnipeg, Nov. 3.—The death of the Hon. Thomas Greenway is one of the most widely-discussed topics in the West at the moment. His sudden passing away has called attention to the vast amount of work he accomplished for the betterment of conditions during his residence of close upon 30 years in Manitoba. On every street corner and in every village store there is a revival of the stories of how he successfully fought the railway monopoly and secured competing roads; how he secured the lowering of the grain freight rates and his intense interest in legislation that would help the farming community to get the very most out of their farms and for their produce. There is universal regret that the West will lose the advantage of his keen knowledge of western needs in connection with the Railway Commission. It was felt when he received the appointment that no man was in a better condition to press western needs on the attention of the Commission. It is hardly possible for eastern Canadians to realize all that the Railway Commission means to the West. Adequate and efficient representation on that commission means more to the Canadian West than it does to any other part of Canada to-day and very grave anxiety will be experienced by farmers and merchants alike, as to who will be chosen to fill the place left vacant by the death of Mr. Greenway.

During the early part of the week elections and election returns absorbed everyone, but things are settling once more to the normal and the community at large is devoutly hoping that Canada will never again be disgraced by a political campaign of the same type. Interest in the American elections is keen here and elaborate preparations are being made to give the returns next Tuesday.

Wheat receipts for the week have averaged about half a million bushels daily inspected at Winnipeg, but in spite of this movement the markets have held very firm and there has been a surprising tendency to advance on every bit of damage news from the Argentine. Though it would be impossible to say that export trade had been very active on any particular day, the volume of business for the week has been large. Early in the week there was a demand for Nos. 1 and 2 northern, but towards the close the demand was for No. 3 northern and lower grades. Traders in Alberta red winter wheat complain that again there was a large quantity of wheat sold for October delivery which had not reached Winnipeg up to noon Saturday, the last of the month. Receipts of winter wheat have been very small all week, in fact, on many days there have been none at all.

It has been a week of the letting of contracts for elevators. A couple of weeks ago two representatives of the Scottish Co-Operative Wholesale Society came out with a view of looking into the question of erecting elevators. Together with the Winnipeg representative, Geo. Fisher, they made a careful examination of the G.T.P., and on their return to Winnipeg let the contracts for the immediate erection of s x elevators, all within the boundaries of the Province of Manitoba, and stated that probably next year they would extend their line into Saskatchewan. They expressed themselves as highly pleased with the country and satisfied with the outlook for the future.

It will be remembered by many that this company, which is among the largest milling concerns in Great Britain, was contemplating the erection of a line of elevators last year, but when the Manitoba Legislature put the Grain Exchange in such an unsatisfactory position with regard to its charter, the company decided to rest on its oars and see how things would turn out. The representatives went into matters very thoroughly here and expressed themselves as satisfied with the new Exchange building and presumably with the new Winnipeg Exchange, which has nothing in common with the old Grain and Produce Exchange.

In addition to these interior elevators along the line of the G.T.P., that company has called for tenders for the erection of the first of their huge terminal elevators at Fort William. Elevators which are the tile tank variety are ultimately to be in units of 10,000,000 bushels each but the first section, for which the tenders call will consist of a working house and tanks with a capacity of 4,000,000 bushels. This elevator will be completed to receive the crop of 1909. Still another terminal elevator is going in at Port Arthur with a capacity of 2,000,000 bushels. The name of the company in this case is withheld for the present.

There has been a very general increase in building activity in Winnipeg and the West this fall, and though figures are not at hand for October, those for September, which have just recently been completed, show come very gratifying gains over the same month last year. For example, Winnipeg's building bill for September, 1908, was $447,000, as against $385,000 last year; Edmonton $123,425, against $43,000 in 1907, and Fort William $144,900, against $25,378 last year. It is highly probably that October will show a corresponding increase, for as the weather has been very fine, building has been pushed rapidly during the month. The Manitoba Iron Works has completed the contract for structural steel on the new Government examining warehouse which was let on May 20th. It is an enormous structure just in the rear of the new Grain Exchange and facing on McDermott Ave. East. There are 1,400 tons of steel in this contract. This company have had pass through their structural department in the last eight months, for Winnipeg buildings alone, 2,600 tons of steel and in addition have furnished a very large amount of tanks, stand pipes, mine cars, lumber trucks and the like, and the Vulcan Iron Works Company have been equally busy.

The question of insurance rates, now that the high pressure plant is in actual operation, is becoming very acute, and at the present time it looks as if the matter would be satisfactorily arranged. A. L. Johnson, representing the Board of Trade, appeared before the city councillors during the week bringing a definite assurance that if the city will maintain the ordinary normal domestic water pressure at from 70 to 80 pounds, instead of 30 to 50, as at present, a very considerable reduction in fire insurance rates will be granted by the underwriters. The proposal submitted by Mr. Johnson on behalf of the insurance committee of the Board of Trade calls for a reduction of 20 per cent on the rates in the surcharge district, where 50c had been added to each premium. This district is outside the high pressure area. The reduction would amount practically to the additional amount paid by the policyholders under the surcharge. The rates in this district run roughly from $1.75 to $3. In buildings where a sprinkler system is maintained, a 15 per cent. reduction on total premiums is proposed.

In addition to actual reduction in rates it is expected that another advantage will accrue. That is, that a number of companies giving exceptionally low rates who have heretofore refused to open up in Winnipeg, now conditions are so nearly perfect, will be induced to come and those wishing to insure will get the benefit.

The movement of immigration is quite active at present as a large number of American land seekers have taken advantage of the fine weather and having completed fall work in their own country have come to look at ours. One large party of Germans from the States have not only come to look, but have moved in bodily. There were 56 families in one party that is going into the Crossfield district in Alberta. They brought a large amount of stock with them and are a particularly industrious and thrifty lot of people. Another party of homeseekers came in from Omaha, Neb.; Waterloo, Dysart and Boone, Ia., and made a daylight run to the last Mount country, on the line of the Pleasant Hills branch of the C.P.R. They were taken for a trip on Last Mountain lake and finally decided on land to the west of that body of water. Some of these men will come in this coming spring and others next fall. The bulk of these men were farmers and a few were bank managers, who bought land with a view of settling farmers on it.

Hardwaremen report an especially good business this fall, both in stoves and furnaces. Sales of furnaces have been very large in rural districts, where a number of new houses have been erected this season.

An interesting shipment during the week was eight carloads from Prince Albert. Heretofore though many hundred head were raised in the Prince Albert district, shipments have been small for the simple reason that the large lumber and tie camps to the north of Prince Albert formed a market that readily absorbed all the offerings. Now the trade in raising cattle has increased to such an extent that they are seeking outside markets for their steers.

The situation in the West may be summed up at this date as steady, with a good outlook for future trade, and very gratifying receipts of cash.—H.

QUEBEC MARKETS

Montreal, Nov. 5, 1908.

POINTERS—

Butter—Advanced.
Cheese—Advanced.
Provisions—Easier.
Eggs—Steady.
Fruits—Declined.

The markets have not shown much change this week. Business has received some impetus from the colder weather, but this has not been so noticeable in grocery lines as in dry goods. There seems to be a certain steadiness, however, imparted to the markets by the settlement of the political situation. The butter market, which is at all times considerable of an enigma, is presenting this week some new features. This fact is due to the failure of the Australian and New Zealand shippers to supply the English markets with the anticipated volume of stock, consequently this has led to a stimulation of the demand for Canadian goods. There is a better demand also for Canadian cheese. Teas present no new features this week. A little juggling of prices was indulged in by one of the sugar refiners, but now prices have settled back to their previous level. Molasses and syrups are only passably active. The honey market displays nothing novel, continuing firm in tone. Beans are not as active as they should be at this time of the year, Other lines are practically in the same position as last reported.

SUGAR—Buyers are not anxious to stock heavily and are buying in a hand-to-mouth manner. There was some difference in refiners' prices during the week, but prices have settled down to the old level, as stated in the last report.

TEA—Locally trade in Japan lines is fair and the situation remains as last reported. Advices from London state that Ceylon imports during September were small, but owing to there having been five Tuesday sales in the month the quantity offered looks larger than it was a year ago. The slight falling off in quality which was expected a month ago, has been noticeable, although prices have not materially suffered. Common teas have been least in demand, but a comparison of the prices now ruling, with those of a month ago shows but little change. Minor fluctuations take place in almost every sale, but the average for the month is higher than it was in August, which proves either that the supply was short of requirements, or that the decline in quality was not regarded very seriously by the trade. Locally trade in black lines is distinctly on the quiet side.

CANNED GOODS

Ontario and Quebec.

The canned goods situation presents little change this week though there is considerable activity manifest. A large part of retailers' stocks have already been delivered though during the past week or two some of those who have been holding off in the expectancy of something happening in the Fall have been purchasing rather largely. There has been quite an active demand for all lines of fruits and vegetables. The large pack of tomatoes has made its influence felt recently for it is reported that considerable cutting has been going on in these goods on the part of independent canners. How prices will tend in the Spring is a matter of considerable interest.

D. A. Gordon, M.P., president of the Wallaceburg Sugar Co., of Wallaceburg, was in Toronto on Tuesday on a business trip.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

POINTERS—

Sugar—Steady.
Teas—Quiet.
Dried Fruits—New dates and figs in.
Nuts—New filberts in.

Toronto, November 5, 1908.

The wholesale markets are appreciably brighter this week and there is generally a better feeling among the trade. There is no apparent reason for this at first sight. "No, I don't think it's either the elections nor the cold weather," said a leading wholesaler yesterday. "It's simply a returning to the amount of business that ought to be done. The retailers have been going cannily so long that their stocks in a good many lines have fallen low and they are simply forced to buy to keep going." Others attribute the better feeling to the cold weather and the fact that farmers are not able to plow and are now coming in to purchase Winter supplies. Whatever may be the season it is a fact that business is better than it has been for four or five weeks.

Collections, too, are pretty generally satisfactory. Local wholesalers have not a great deal on their books, as a result of the past year's conservative methods, and what is there is pretty good value, but money is coming in fairly freely.

The interesting features of the market this week are the new fruits—figs and dates, and the nuts, new filberts, which have just come in. Prices have continued steady in most lines, though cutting is being indulged in by one or two houses in particular lines.

SUGAR—Since the up and down movement of both raw and refined markets noted last week the situation has remained quite steady, there being no movement of any moment in earlier market. The situation at present seems to depend on weather conditions in connection with the European beet crop, and reports from correspondents in the beet growing districts report that even a few days of warm moist weather would seriously affect the crop. This would ultimately tend to firm up prices here. At present, however, there is nothing new in the situation and no probability of any immediate change.

TEA—The local market continues quiet with the better grades of Indian and Ceylon holding quite firm. The same condition prevails in reports of auctions in primary markets though a good deal of activity is manifest in these.

COFFEE—Business locally is brisk with no change in prices. The primary markets have been wobbling somewhat as a result of several indirect influences but are rather firmer this week.

DRIED FRUITS—There is rather a better feeling in these goods this week, the demand for the new fruits being fairly active. New dates from the Tabristan, recently arrived, came to local houses on Tuesday. These are fine stock and promise to be much in demand, though opening prices are a little above old stock. New figs are also in in some quantity and while there is quite a range in prices the standard is about the same as for last year's goods. Local prices on Valencia raisins have eased off a little lately though firmer reports come from Denia. Stocks of peels seem to be a little short in Toronto houses and inquiry is being made at other points. Apricots continue to pass out well in consequence of this year's low prices. Prunes are rather dull.

MANUFACTURERS VISIT O. A. C.

150 Members of Association Spent Pleasant and Profitable Day in Guelph Last Saturday.

The visit of about 150 members of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association to the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, last Saturday, was an event in the history of both these institutions which will leave its effect beneficially, not only upon the commercial interests of the Province but also upon the college itself. That so large a number of the leading manufacturers of the country should leave their busy trade centres to inspect an institution with whose actual workings they would naturally be unfamiliar is creditable, but that they should wax enthusiastic over every feature demonstrated and explained to them by President Creelman and his associate professors augurs well for the college and its work. No class of the commercial community is so constantly obliged to study improvements, inventions and systems for betterment than the manufacturer, and it was readily seen that the objects and aims of the Ontario Agricultural College when so practically demonstrated as they were on this tour appealed to the visitors in a marked degree. To most of them the entire system of educating and improving the conditions of the Ontario agricultural community was a distinct revelation, and the work accomplished by the officials and the teaching staff could not be too highly praised.

The visitors spent about six hours in inspecting the laboratories, museums, library and stables, G. C. Creelman, president of the college, guiding them from building to building and explaining the purposes of same. He was assisted in their respective departments by Professors Dean, Galbraith and Zavitz, and though briefly made, the explanations of the work of these gentlemen proved that a wonderful improvement had been effected throughout the Province by the experiments undertaken and the influences brought to bear upon the work of the Canadian farmer through the young men and women taking the course prescribed. Prof. Dean's work is of particular value to the grocery trade in that it deals directly with two necessary articles of sale and consumption, cheese and butter. A vast improvement has been effected in the scientific production of these two staples, but although much had been accomplished it was the intention of the college, through careful study of all the conditions, from the proper housing, feeding, breeding and selection of the best dairy cattle to bring the reputation of Canadian cheese and butter up to the high standard of Irish, Danish and Australian makes.

The party also visited the horticultural building and spent some time in the biological building examining the collection of Canadian fruits and vegetables in wax.

C. A. Zavitz, in a brief lecture illustrated the principles of wheat blending and the making of flour experimentally was watched with a great deal of interest.

One of the interesting points in the tour was McDonald Hall, a ladies' college, where domestic science is taught. The visitors were greatly interested and pleased to see how the young ladies, farmers' daughters and those from city homes, were instructed in the methods of cooking, the art of sewing and care of the house. The splendid luncheon served in the large dining hall of this building was a delightful surprise and when President Creelman announced at the conclusion of the meal that the entire dinner had been prepared by the young ladies, the cheering and applause of the visitors expressed their enjoyment and must have pleased the students. Not only was the culinary treat their work, but they also generously waited upon their guests.

President Creelman took occasion in a short speech to lay before the members an outline of the plan and work of the college. It pleased him, and he thanked the members for their friendly trip and interest shown. It augured well to him, this interest, and he trusted that the hard-headed business men present would realize to the fullest extent what the college was doing, not only for the farmer and the dairyman, but also for the manufacturer and the consuming public.

R. Hobson, President of the C.M.A., made a brief speech, thanking Mr. Creelman, the professors and the young ladies for the magnificent treat that had been tendered to the members of the association. He doubted not, he said, that the lessons learned by him and his fellow members would bear good fruit in bringing to a better understanding on everyone's part the value of this institution to the Province and the Dominion.

DON'T LET OLD GOODS ACCUMULATE.

One of the greatest sources of loss in retail stores is the accumulation of old stock which through age has become unsalable, or at least has lost a portion of its value. If you look over your stock in October and find you have still on hand part of a lot of goods received in May, it is time to make extraordinary efforts to get rid of them. If necessary, make a job lot of such goods and offer them at a price that will move them. It is better to stand a partial loss than a total loss. This rule of keeping goods as short a time as possible will work to your advantage greatly in keeping your stock clean and fresh, and will insure the minimum of profit on a given amount of invested capital.

A great many sales are lost and a great deal of dead stock is carried by stores which are in the habit of having places behind or under the counters in which to place goods. These are probably never overhauled except at stock-taking times, and these drawers and hiding places are an excellent catch-basin for "stickers," which ought to be on the counters where they can be pushed more than ordinarily.

Do not have any place in your store where goods can be stuck away out of sight. If you have plenty of room it is better to have all the goods above the counters, on the shelving. Have no shelves below, so that there will be no opportunity to put things away out of sight. A great many stores, however, cannot do this, as they are crowded for room, and it is, therefore, necessary that a part of the goods should be kept below the counter board.

If this is necessary, see that every lot of goods not in easy access is looked over and examined and brought out to the light at least once a week. If the goods are kept out where they can be seen at all times they are very much more apt to sell than if hidden away. The salesmen are usually very careless about goods which are not easy to reach, and they very seldom take the pains to look into any of these old drawers or under the shelves to find the goods to sell.

If the consumers come in and call for some particular thing which salesmen know to be in such and such a place they usually go and get it, but if it is in some place where there is any doubt about finding it, they either say they haven't got it or they don't take the pains to look, or substitute something else, which possibly the customer does not want.

If you have goods that cannot be carried on the shelves, arrange bins on the counter, or on a centre table in the middle of the aisle, and place them there in full view of the customers. Do not let anything be hidden from sight.—Retail Grocers' Advocate.

CHANGES IN MEDLANDS, LTD.

The past few days have seen some changes in the business of Medlands, Ltd., who have operated a number of retail grocery stores in Toronto. The store at 744 Queen Street west was sold on Monday to Macaulay & Pond, of Toronto. R. Y. Medlands, who has been running this store, has withdrawn his stock from Medlands, Ltd., and will be henceforth associated with his brother, John, in the wholesale business on Front Street. T. J. Medlands, who has been conducting the store on King Street east, will continue as president and manager of the company.

OTTAWA.

November 3.—It seems to have become accepted as one of Nature's phenomena in the Capital that every market morning is a foggy morning, and Saturday proved no exception to the rule. There was a good attendance, however. Potatoes still cling to their old figure of 90c, while celery was, as usual, very plentiful at 25c to 40c a dozen. Cabbages were abundant at 70c to 75c a dozen. Butter was a shade cheaper, at least pail was, and did not go as a general thing above 26c per lb. Eggs, however, were still firm at 25c to 30c per dozen, even though the oratical rhapsodies of budding young political speakers no longer furnish a market.

Fire, which at one time looked very threatening, broke out at 3.30 Friday morning in the rear of the property on Sparks Street occupied by Kavanagh Bros., grocers. A shed was destroyed and fire got into the upper part of the building. An alarm was sent in, and immediately afterwards there was a second alarm, a fresh wind blowing and there being danger of adjoining structures catching. It was confined to the one, however, and the loss will be around $1,000. The grocery was not damaged, except by smoke.

Thomas Reynolds, of the Quaker Oats Company, Peterboro, is in the city calling on the trade.

An interesting fight will soon be launched between the Retail Grocers' Association of Ottawa, and the peddlers of this city. A. G. Johnston, secretary of the association, stated yesterday that the association was to engage a solicitor at once to take the case for that organization with the object of making the peddlers pay a higher fee to peddle in the streets of the city. He said that there were at least 250 peddlers who peddle fruit and vegetables through Ottawa. Most of these people live in the outskirts of the city, in Cyrville and other points, and in the majority of cases are persons who have no gardens, but buy from the farmers when they arrive on the market and by paying 15c fee for selling on the market are thus permitted to sell all afternoon throughout the city. In most cases they pay no taxes to the city, as they live outside, and got privileges of peddling in the city for the 15c market fee. He maintained that this was not fair to the grocers, who paid heavy taxes, and whose trade was being so seriously cut into by these peddlers. They came on the market at night to have a good place in the morning. The association is first going to move the health department to act. It is claimed that the rigs loaded with fruits are left over night often in most unsanitary places and then peddled out to the citizens. He also claimed that the fruit they bought was the leavings of that bought by the grocers and was not in a sanitary condition. These are the charges against the peddler which will be urged by the association's solicitor this fall and winter. The grocers will make the question of street peddlers an issue in the municipal elections, and the war between the grocer and the peddler will be watched with a great deal of interest by the citizens of this city. The grocers will begin their regular semi-monthly meetings very soon.

TORONTO.

November 4.—Clemes Bros., wholesale fruit dealers, Church and King Streets, introduced an innovation on Wednesday last, when they held their first fall and winter opening. This was something new in the line of wholesale fruit and demonstrated that the firm are not afraid to strike out on original lines. All the trade was invited and the warehouse was crowded. The decorations were elaborate, consisting of pine bows, maple leaves and Union Jacks, ferns and palms. Music was furnished and in the tea room light refreshments were served. The fall display of fruit was particularly attractive and some heavy purchases were made by local grocers. R. Barron, Yonge Street, was the first buyer, his name appearing on a couple of fancy lines of about 100 kegs of imported grapes.

TRADE MEMBERS IN PARLIAMENT

Some of the Successful Candidates at the Recent Elections—Grocers Not so Well Represented as They Might be.

While the grocery trade will not be very largely nor very directly represented in the House of Commons when the next session of Parliament meets

D. A. GORDON,
Re-elected Member for East Kent.

there will be a number of thoroughly representative men who may be depended on to look after the trade's interests.

One of these is D. A. Gordon, who was re-elected by a large majority for the Government in East Kent. Mr. Gordon is best known as the father of the Canadian beet sugar industry. In Southwestern Ontario he bears the added distinction of being the "uncrowned king of Wallaceburg." Mr. Gordon furthermore bore the distinction—according to A. H. Clarke, K.C.—of being the handsomest man in the last house. Certainly his imposing figure, handsome face and silvery hair mark him whereever he goes as a man among men. Though the term, silvery hair, suggests age. Mr. Gordon is still in his prime. Fifty years young, he has a long term of usefulness before him.

Mr. Gordon is a native of Wallaceburg, and has lived there all his life; yet in his time, as a business man and as a parliamentarian, he has traveled much. He began his business life in his home town as a stave manufacturer, in partnership with Jas. W. Steinhoff, Mr. Gordon being now president of the business, which is still carried on as the Wallaceburg Cooperage Company. In 1896 the Sydenham Glass Company was formed, Mr. Gordon being actively interested and for many years managing director. From this he branched out to the manufacture of sugar from home-grown beets, his study of the Michigan industry resulting in the formation of the Wallaceburg Sugar Company some eight years ago. Despite many difficulties, the industry is now several years past the experimental stage, the output of sugar is increasing, and sugar beets are one of the most reliable and important sources of revenue to farmers in the district. Mr. Gordon has given the industry careful study, paying visits to Germany and Austria where he investigated the most improved processes of handling the beet, as displayed in the countries where the industry practically saw its birth.

Mr. Gordon is also a leading shareholder in and general manager of the Chatham, Wallaceburg & Lake Erie Electric Railway, recently established. He is the founder of modern Wallaceburg. He always took a deep interest in municipal affairs; served for several years on the town council, and was thrice mayor of the town, in 1899, 1900 and 1901. In 1900 he contested Bothwell for the House of Commons in the Liberal interests, but was defeated by James Clancy by a narrow majority. Four years later, when Bothwell became West Kent, Mr. Gordon was more successful, carrying the constituency by a majority of 372. This year his majority is over 500. Mr. Gordon's home town of Wallaceburg in the recent election gave him a majority of 332—a vote of over three to one in his favor. Politically, though a Liberal, Mr. Gordon is of the broad-minded type, and is more interested in promoting the country's welfare than in securing party advantage. A feature of his four years in Parliament was his strenuous efforts to secure better freight rates.

LLOYD HARRIS,
Elected Member for Brantford.

Another member of the trade, through his connection with the Canadian canning industry, who has shown his worth in the past and who well merited re-election is David Marshall, who successfully contested East Elgin in the Liberal interests.

For many years Mr. Marshall has been intimately connected with the canning business. He was the founder of the Aylmer brand of goods and was for some years president of the company. He was also a prime mover in the forming of the Canadian Canners, and for some years occupied the position of vice-president and general manager. He is still a director of the company.

During the past session he has been one of the most active members in the House, his energy being particularly noticeable in the attention he gave to the Meat and Canned Foods Act.

Lloyd Harris, who was elected Liberal in Brantford, is interested in the grocery trade through his position as president of the Brantford Starch Works. He is also connected with several other industrial concerns in the same city, and though young, has already shown his worth as a business man. He has taken an active interest in the work of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and has held the position of vice-president for Ontario, resigning to devote his energies to his political campaign. Mr. Harris enters Parliament under favorable circumstances and should make his mark among Canadian political leaders.

It is a regrettable fact that the grocery trade is not more widely represented, carrying on, as it does, perhaps the largest share of commerce of any department of trade, and being concerned in many important questions which come before our legislators, its representation seems markedly inadequate. Members of the trade seem to prefer to devote their energies directly to business interests than to strive after what is regarded sometimes as higher honors.

WHAT TO DO IN NOVEMBER

Make Early Preparations for the Christmas Rush—Give Special Attention to Seasonable Goods—The Time for Account Collecting.

November—the first winter month—ushers in the real winter season, a season usually of brisk buying in lines that have been largely neglected during the summer months. For the grocer, then, the month should be a time of preparation for the winter's business.

First of all the store should present a considerably different appearance than it did under its summer dress. Get the will take off all the dust and fly-dirt and will brighten up the labels immensely. Oftentimes a sale is lost through this little matter of dust and fly-dirt over an otherwise attractive label. Of course, it is understood that the shelves are always kept in a clean and tidy condition. but a little extra attention to this matter just now will not come amiss. Clean up the place in the corner winter to get mixed up with the new pack goods.

Let Summer Breakfast Foods Go.

There's another line, too, that it will pay to make a few specials on during the next couple of weeks, and that's the ready-to-eat breakfast foods. Demand for these seems to sag pretty well at this time of the year, and though the cartons of pretty nearly all the good sellers make good decorations for the top shelf, they're rather likely to make a customer think of a cold breafast, something not too pleasant on these brisk mornings. These package goods are mostly pretty bulky and will hardly pay to keep till spring. Better get 'em cleaned out.

Interior R. Higgins & Son's Grocery, 802-804 Yonge Street, Toronto, one of the Largest and Handsomest Grocery Stores in Canada.

This store is well situated on the west side of Yonge Street, just above Bloor. Established 22 years ago, their business has, through honest dealing and courteous treatment of their customers, become one of the largest grocery establishments in Canada. With an efficient staff of seventeen clerks, a delivery service consisting of six wagons and a store stocked with the very finest groceries, provisions and flowers, R. Higgins & Son are in a position to cater to the needs of a large and ever-growing patronage.

They have made quite a specialty of teas, and carry a large and well-assorted stock of Red Rose tea in packages, and the prominent display they give this tea shows the confidence they have in it.

Their window displays of flowers, fruits, confectionery, groceries and meats show that they take full advantage of their fifty-foot frontage, as their displays attract the attention of large numbers of people daily. This store is a credit to R. Higgins & Son, and to the city.—From the Toronto Sunday World, Nov. 1, 1908.

mosquito netting, if it's there yet, down from off your shelves, and the bottles of raspberry vinegar and lime juice off the counter. By this time there is, or should be, a host of new and seasonable goods in stock, which will well repay display. But before getting out the new goods, get the store into good shape to display them. Take a damp cloth and go over your shelf goods when you have a few minutes to spare next week. It where a leaky can of something or other left its mark. It, too, is likely to spoil a few more labels.

Clear Out the Old Canned Goods.

What about that three or four cases of last year's tomatoes and plums down cellar? Now's the time to get rid of them and it would pretty nearly pay you to let them go about at cost, rather than have them hanging on through the

That provides room for some of the new canned goods you've just recently gotten in, and a few pyramids of these with their bright labels on the same top shelves will do a good deal toward brightening up the store.

By All Means Plan for Christmas.

Christmas is only about eight weeks off. That seems lots of time to get ready for the holiday rush, but is it?

One of the big mistakes grocers make at this time of the year is in taking things easy and trusting to things to work out all right a week or so before Christmas. If you stop to think a moment you'll agree that a lot of the work that is done expensively and hurriedly and that causes a great deal of worry during that busy two or three weeks can be planned now with advantage. Take the spare moments now to plan your holiday window dressing and store display and to write some of the ads. you'll be using a few weeks later. Make arrangements now to get the extra help you'll need during Christmas week and you'll likely get the clerk you want before your opposition across the corner sees him.

Get People to Buy Early.

There's a mistake somewhat along the same line the people make. They don't do their Christmas buying soon enough. And the grocer can do a good deal to help this condition by tactful suggestion. Why, for instance, shouldn't Mrs. Brown make her Christmas cake and plum pudding next week instead of six or seven weeks later? They'd both be improved if she did. Again, there's mincemeat to be made and other things which need groceries.

Keep the new goods before the people, and don't forget to tell them about them. If you get a housewife interested in the fine quality of those new Valencias it will, as like as not, start her thinking about that Christmas cake.

A window display of the new raisins and currants and possibly the new prunes and apricots, would be a help. Don't shove a case of each in the window and expect it to do the work, but plan a dainty display, say a pound or so of each on china plates, that will appear appetizing. Some price tickets added will be of good service.

Then, again, there's your special Christmas goods to think about, such as a special supply of confectionery, Christmas crackers, stockings, etc. The travelers will, of course, look after you pretty well in these, but it's well to have planned beforehand what you want.

Above All, Collect Accounts.

If there's one other thing that ought to be done by the grocer in November, and particularly this year, it's to get busy gathering in his accounts. Now is the time, if there ever is any better than the other to push this. Money is at least fairly plentiful just now, and it's far enough away from Christmas so that people haven't started to hang on to it, as they will a little later, for the holiday customs. Time spent in account-collecting during the next few weeks cannot well be better spent.

THE GROCER AND DRUGS.

Retail Merchants Shou'd be Careful Regarding the Goods They Handle.

The Grocer some time ago received a query from a country merchant asking if it was lawful for him to sell quinine, and also enquiring what drugs and medicines he could dispose of without conflicting with the Pharmacy Act. The Grocer pointed out that only a qualified chemist could sell quinine and quoted section 26 of the Pharmacy Act as fully answering the second question.

Writing again the merchant replies: "Many thanks for your answer but your reply is not full enough. The general run of storekeepers carry in stock the following articles: Spirits sweet nitre, blue vitriol, copperas, salt petre, insect powder, carbonate of ammonia for baking, hellebore, Paris green. Will you please let me know if these come under the Pharmacy Act? I am asking for my own protection, as I certainly do not want to carry any of them for my customers' convenience if I am contravening the law. There has been several merchants in the county of Kent caught like myself, I am sure The Grocer would open the eyes of many country merchants to the risks they were running. During the whole of my business experience I was never told by the wholesalers that I had no right to sell quinines."

G. E. Gibbard, President of the Ontario College of Pharmacy, when seen by The Grocer said that the present act distinctly provided that only Paris Green and London Purple (an arsenical insecticide) could be sold by the general merchant, out of all the list named in the foregoing inquiry. He believed that carbonnate of ammonia for baking would be regarded as a chemical and not as a drug and could, therefore, be disposed of.

Mr. Gibbard further said that the Pharmacy Act was strictly enforced. When asked about the active campaign waged by the inspector in Kent and adjoining counties it was learned that such prosecution was taken without instructions or advice from the officers or by the solicitor of the Ontario College of Pharmacy. Some rural storekeepers seem to be rather hostile to the inspector and some little feeling has been aroused.

Mr. Gibbard intimated that the retailer is not wholly to blame in the matter. Samples of opium, laudanum, etc., are sent out by means of travelers of the wholesale druggists. These samples are neatly done up and the rural storekeeper is badgered into buying. Thus, wholesale druggists are parties of the act and Mr. Gibbard intimated that they were being notified that if they persisted in a practice which was inducing general merchants to violate the act, the law would have to take its course with respect to these houses.

"It is not the purpose of the Ontario College of Pharmacy to prosecute anybody but to see that the provisions of the act are lived up to as nearly as possible," remarked Mr. Gibbard in conclusion, "Our inspector gives fair warning and has not been instructed to make widespread prosecutions. I think it will be found he is fair. Certain conditions and provisions must be adhered to and as I intimated, it is not the province of the society to harrass or obsess rural merchants, but to see that the clauses of the act are observed."

BAN ON UNITED STATES SAUSAGE

Cereals and Water Used as Adulterants —Canadian Manufacturers Say Nothing of the Kind Here.

A despatch from Lansing, Mich., says, "Judge Weist, of the Ingham Circuit Court, in a decision last week refused to grant the injunction asked by Armour & Co. to restrain the State Food Department from interfering with the sale of their sausage in Michigan. The state held that cereals and water used in sausage were an adulteration, which contention the company denied, claiming it was necessary to use them to perfect the product. The Court says that sausage means meat and that cereals and water are adulterations added with an evident intent to cheat, and that if sold as pure food product the act perpetrates a fraud, violates the law and would soon drive honest dealers out of the market."

Representative Canadian packers, when seen regarding this, said that conditions which applied to sausage making across the border did not prevail in Canada. In the United States there was a great foreign population to cater to, and in the manufacture of goods for these, barley, onions, garlic and other like ingredients entered. In Canada it was not necessary to cater to this foreign element. In pork sausages, for instance, nothing was used but the ham trimmings and a little seasoning. The best of meat entered into their manufacture.

A leading packer added that, even if cereals were used, he was at a loss to understand why the Michigan court should uphold them as adulterants. Cereals were a food, and could only be looked upon as adulterants if a literal interpretation of the word sausage was "all meat." "However," concluded the speaker, "conditions are vastly different in Chicago from Toronto, with respect to the making of sausage. Very few cereals, if any, are used by the Canadian trade."

Another despatch from Buenos Ayres, Argentina, says: "In spite of the denials of Chicago packers some papers insist that the American traders are endeavoring to control the Argentine meat market. They assert that one concern already has been purchased and that the purchase of others is imminent."

SPRATTS BREAK RECORD.

Spratts Patent, Ltd., Canadian branch, report particularly good business in Dog Cake, orders being received from centres everywhere between the Atlantic and the Pacific. The month of October beats the record for quantity delivered from store and wharf. They also report good sales of Spratt's bulk and package bird seed. Repeat orders are coming in from bird men and traders generally. This is the first year of Spratt's bird seed in this country, and the outlook is very encouraging. Spratt's Dog Cake and Bird Seed can be procured from most of the leading wholesale and retail grocers, druggists and seed men in Canada. A full line of Spratt's supplies is kept in stock at the Canadian branch, 13 St. Therese St., off St. Gabriel St., Montreal.

COCOA COMBINE ON THE TAPIS

Organization of Growers Planned to Control Output and Prices in Primary Markets—Local Dealers Do Not Think Movement Will Materialize.

The latest combine is in cocoa and the scene is in Brazil. A trust is being formed of the producers of cocoa in the several countries in which the bean is grown.

United States Consul-General George E. Anderson, of Rio de Janiero sheds some interesting information on the scheme in a recent report. He describes the plans and purpose of the movement and says "the low price of cocoa which has ruled for some time past, especially during the past year, has led to a desire on the part of the representatives of Portugal and the countries in the northern portion of South America that something be done to protect the industry, and action has been taken in Ecuador, San Thome, San Domingo and Trinidad to organize national associations, organizations in each case to control the price of the product in the markets of the world.

"A representative of the movement has recently arrived in Brazil to organize a similar association among the largest producers of cocoa, and the indications are that unless something quite unforeseen takes place the organization will soon be effected. The success of the world movement of course depends upon Brazil, the largest producer. The only apparent reason why it may not succeed in Brazil is in the fact that many of the cocoa producers are not financially able to carry their crops as may be demanded by the new organization, while the absence of satisfactory banking facilities with most of them renders it difficult to help them.

Low Price a Moving Factor.

"The chief occasion for the proposed organization seems to be in the somewhat extraordinary fluctuations in the price of cocoa in the past few years, the present great depreciation offering unusual occasion for complaint."

A statement issued by projectors of the plan says.

"Taking advantage of this situation a group of powerful speculators in Hamburg, which controls numerous and active agents in Bahia, commenced a series of sales at prices more and more reduced, which succeeded in lowering prices in spite of the vigorous resistance met in Lisbon from producrs of San Thome and Principe. As is generally known, these producers have been organized for a number of years with the most beneficial results."

Continuing the statement, the projectors of the Brazilian organization claim that the present situation can be expected unless producers unite to prevent the manipulation of the crop by those who are organized against them. It claims that its proposed organization is not for the purpose of speculation, but for the purpose of resisting the speculators. The statement continues:

"Without an organization of all the producers of cocoa, not only of Brazil, but of all producing countries, never will the produce be fairly quoted or the price be a living one. There is no occasion for so notable a lowering of price of an article of such world-wide consumption when the consumption is being constantly increased, and each day witnesses the enlargement of its use as a result of a spontaneous propaganda."

The Organizers' Claim.

In their statement the organizers of the trust claim that the low price has not been due either to a lack of demand, or to any possible overproduction It is claimed that the production at present is not large enough to meet the demand, and that by reason of the peculiar demands of the crop in soil and climate the crops of the future will likely be much less than the demand for them. The statement also calls the attention of the Brazilian cocoa producers to the need of combating the adulteration of chocolate. The statement continues: "There is indispensable, then: (1) The organization of an agricultural credit system, freeing the producers from the subjection in which they now exist; (2) the organization of an association of defense, including the principal middlemen and producers of Bahia; (3) an agreement between this association and the analogous association of Portugal, which is now ready to enter into such an agreement."

As Viewed in Toronto.

Local houses do not apprehend that there will be any combine. Some eighteen months ago there was a corner on the market by buyers contracting for all the product of the trees. The crop was a heavy one and the price was boosted from 12 to 28 cents, the highest figure ever known. The result was that wholesalers refused to stock up, and then the financial depression in the United States coming on, found those, who have tried to corner the market, with big stocks on hand and unable to unload. Owing to the stringency and the fact that the demand dropped very low, no cocoa house made any money last year.

As a result of the attempted hold-up a reaction set in and the prices for Trinidad cocoa are now the lowest that they have ever been—thirteen cents—while the best Ceylon brands are not more than 18 cents. Toronto dealers have no fear that the effort of producers to form a protective combine will succeed, especially after the experience of certain capitalists in the late squeese.

SOME FAVORABLE COMMENTS.

"The Coming of Age number of the Canadian Grocer was received by the local trade with many encomiums. Past special numbers have been good, but the consensus of opinion is that this was certainly the best ever. Local subscribers, and they comprise the best and biggest men in the local grocery ranks, are delighted with the number and join in congratulating The Grocer, alike on material and make up. "The best on record—and there have been some pretty good ones," is the general comment. — Chatham Correspondent.

Say, wasn't the Fall number of The Grocer a valuable volume? It is really worth the year's subscription. What better way for a manufacturer to tell thousands of retailers of some special broom, or tea, or something else. Considering this fact, it is money well spent. Hundreds of wholesalers and manufacturers make the mistake of their lives in not having a permanent space. I am a retailer and if I want a line of goods or samples the first thing I think of is to write the man with the permanent ad. In fact there are hundreds of wholesalers practically unknown outside of their own city. It's a big mistake.—Kingston Correspondent.

LONDON CORRESPONDENCE.

Nov. 3.—A. E. Silverwood, local manager for Flavelles, Ltd., states there will be plenty of Thanksgiving turkeys, and they will sell at fair prices. The quantity of turkeys that will be ready for the market by Thanksgiving will be only a small percentage of the crop that is in the country, but still it is thought there will be plenty in the country to meet the demand. Last Thanksgiving prices started high, and then declined rapidly. Mr. Silverwood thinks they will start lower than they did last year, but will remain steady, or have perhaps only a very slight rise. There is a good average crop of turkeys in the country, although many of them are not as far advanced at present as they sometimes are, owing to the very dry weather. "I expect," says Mr. Silverwood, "to see turkeys selling retail at from about 12 to 13 cents per pound on Thanksgiving, perhaps 14 cents for very choice birds. The prevailing prices for the farmers at country places where they are bought in large lots will be 9 cents a pound alive and 11 cents a pound dressed."

EFFECTIVE WINDOW DRESSING

A Peanut Butter Window Which Shows Good Principles of Display and is Educative in Character.

The engraving shown herewith is illustrative of something comparatively new in lines of groceries and will therefore be of general interest. It is a display of peanut butter in various forms, showing the process of manufacture. The five large jars shown in the foreground contain: first, Spanish peanuts, known to everyone; second, Spanish peanuts, shelled; third, husks and kernels; fourth, roasted peanuts; fifth, Imperial peanut butter. In the background are a number of stands showing peanut butter in the various sizes, and throughout the entire display were scattered cards containing excerpts from reports on the highly nutritious value of nut foods.

HINTS ON DISPLAY.

The grocer who really appreciates the pulling power of his windows, may divide his displays into classes, concentrating for a few days upon one line, then switching to another, offering high grade goods for inspection and telling about them by pictures and placards in a way which appeals to the intelligence of his customers, giving them information they did not have before and at the same time exciting their interest and a desire to learn more.

Such a system, put into effect and continued, will accomplish in the end two purposes—viz., it will be a powerful incentive to attract the interest of the customers to stimulate their natural desire for information, and thus draw and hold trade, and it will likewise be a powerful aid in establishing the reputation of the grocer as a man of intelligence and information in that in which he deals. Once let the people of any neighborhood acquire confidence in the ability, information, integrity and intelligence of their grocer and he may bid good day to hard times, for then he can sell anything he chooses, so long as its quality meets the proper standards.

Let the grocer take, for instance, tea and coffee, on neither of which subjects the public has much accurate information. Let him give up a window for three or four days to an exposition of the different teas, both package and bulk he has in stock, telling about their quality, where grown, how prepared, packed and shipped, all briefly, of course, as brevity is necessary when giving information by means of placards. Usually the grocer will be able to secure some good pictures illustrating the process of picking and preparing tea leaves for the market. Such pictures will draw the attention of the passers-by; they will read the posters, and when next they want tea the chances are that at least a considerable percentage of the people who examine the window will have an impulse to go to that store to buy it. Probably a certain proportion will come in at once and make purchases.

One of the things all people seek is information which will lead them to an intelligent discrimination between the good and the bad. If the grocer is in a position to give this information in an unobstrusive way, he strengthens his hold upon his customers. Of course, it is not Mrs. Smith, to whom the grocer is talking who needs any information, but it is some other lady, name not mentioned, who perhaps was recently married and is new to the ways of housekeeping. If a certain amount of interesting information is put in the window, customers may air some knowledge they may have and accept for their own what they learned from inspecting the window. At any rate, it will put the customer in a good humor with herself and with the grocer.

A HANDY APPLIANCE FOR GROCERS.

The McGregor Paper Bag-Holder, an advertisement of which appears on another page of this issue, is meeting with a good deal of favor among grocers, confectioners and others who have been using it. The holder is convenient and saves considerable time over old methods. An inquiry from the manufacturer at 175 Borden St., Toronto, will bring further information.

FLOWER AND VEGETABLE GROWERS WILL MEET.

The annual convention of the Ontario Horticultural Association, which is the central organization of the horticultural societies in the Province of Ontario, will be held at the City Hall, Toronto, on Tuesday and Wednesday, Nov. 10 and 11, commencing at 2 p.m. A very interesting program has been arranged bearing on all phases of horticultural work, and a large attendance is expected. On Thursday, Nov. 12, the Ontario Vegetable Growers' Association will hold its annual convention in the City Hall, the first session starting at 9 a.m. Both these conventions are being held during the week of the Ontario Horticultural Exhibition.

A BULLETIN ON BEET SUGAR.

The Bureau of Census and Statistics is at present preparing a bulletin giving full information as to the statistics of the beet sugar industry in Canada. Since the rearrangement of the tariff last session allowing the importation of foreign beet sugar the factories engaged in refining beet sugar are placed on a more paying basis. The new bulletin will be the first Government statement on the conditions and prospects for the industry in Canada, and it is understood will give encouragement to the establishment of sugar beet factories in other parts of the Dominion.

"Men Who Sell Things"

The Sales Manager and His Work—The Impression Made by the Sales Force a Mighty Factor—How to Get an Interest in the Business.

By Walter D. Moody—Serial rights for Canada purchased by the MacLean Publishing Co. from the publishers, A. McClurg & Co., Chicago.

That is natural, but don't lose sight of him; at the same time do not follow or watch all his moves for fear of losing a customer or a sale now and then. If you allow your competition to get on your nerves, the shrewdest of buyers and the most seductive of prices will fail to look attractive to you.

Let the Buyer Alone.

Let the buyers take care of themselves. Your business is not buying, but selling.

Establish an individuality and a good reputation, and live up to them and not upon them, and success is likely to abide with you.

If you are going to get rattled or flustered at some sensational move of a competitor, he will play upon your weak spot, and you will be apt to find yourself spending your energy at random.

Drive the nail home, and get a reputation for doing so, and every one will come to know by the appearance of the work that you did it, because your individuality is stamped upon it. Between taps, of course, you might glance from the corner of your eye at your competitor's strokes; but make up your mind first, last, and all the time that you are not selling your competitor's goods, that the goods of your house are good goods, and that you can sell them.

And you will sell them.

Time and thought taken in complaining of competition is useless expenditure of energy. It lessens your capacity for the accomplishment of things for which you were employed.

The worst competition is that of the nefficient man of poor ability.

If you are a good salesman, you will understand your advantages over such men, and profit by them through a proper relationship to the buyers of the house that puts its signature at the bottom of your monthly salary cheque.

CHAPTER XXI.

The Sales Manager.

The saying that a man must work out his own salvation as a salesman is good as far as it goes, but it does not go far. That is only part of the programme.

The best salesmen any house can have are the salesmen it builds for itself. The old saying, "Salesmen are born, and not made," is the veriest kind of tommyrot in this day of science and progress.

Naturally, the root of salesmanship must be in the man himself, but the knowledge of how to develop that root into a plant that blossoms and brings forth fruit is where the work of the sales manager comes in.

One good salesman trained and developed in this way is worth a dozen floaters — the here-to-day-and-gone-to-morrow class.

When a salesman gets ready to hear, he is going to be profited by the sales manager.

You can take the best seed in the world and scatter it about and leave it alone, but there will be no crop; but when you plough the soil, put in the seed, and harrow it, in due time comes the harvest.

An Agricultural Parallel.

So you can take the best seed from the granaries of salesmanship and scatter it about on the ground of men's intellect, and you need not expect any return from it; but if you take the ploughshare of ripened judgment and prepare the ground and harrow it over with faith, patience, and encouragement, then the seed falls down into good ground and springs up and bears fruit in the salesmen, some. fifty, some sixty, and some one hundred fold, to the success of that house.

It is just as necessary that you prepare your mind to hear as it is to prepare your ground for the seed. This is the seed of salesmanship falling upon your mind, and if there is no preparation for the seed there will be no harvest. Get ready to hear..

The poorest sales manager on earth talks enough salesmanship to his men every month to make them all top-notchers, when there is a willingness to hear on the part of the salesmen.

The greatest boon to the sales interests of any house is a game sales manager, one who is never afraid of the truth and who knows how to use it in dealing with men; and the greatest drawback is the time-serving sales manager, who is afraid of hurting some one's feelings if he does his duty.

Now, it takes two things to make an efficient sales department—a good sales manager and a good hearer; and when you get a good sales manager and a good hearer together, then you are going to have a first-class sales force.

Well, if a sales manager, backed by the very experience that you must encounter in order to become successful, must also think and plan continually in order to get ready to prepare the ground for the seed, what must you do to get ready to hear?

Be not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work.

Getting Ready to Hear.

If you want to be successful in your work, get ready to hear.

How will you get ready to hear?

By thinking and planning and willingness. Just precisely as the sales manager gets ready to help you, you ought to get ready to hear.

The standards of two salesmen may differ. Not because one is more capable than the other, but because one has a willingness and a desire to do big things and the other has not. The man of large conceptions once worked in narrow channels, but when he saw a wider view of what his work might be he embraced the opportunity to become a bigger man. It is just about as easy to think of a twenty-storey building as it is of a one-storey building, when you turn your mind to contemplating it.

Make it your business to know what is the best that might be in salesmanship for you, and stretch your mind to conceive it, and then devise some way to attain it. Keep in close touch with the head of your sales department, but let him advise you. A willingness on your part to seek and make every possible use of his counsel and experience will aid you materially in your purpose.

An evil habit may be fostered in a sales organization as in an individual—the habit of indifference, of shirking, of mischief-making, the clique habit, and a thousand ills of a negative kind, not the least of which is the habit of finding fault with superiors.

Sometimes the trouble may have started with one wrong-headed man or one restless malcontent, and have spread and fastened upon the business until the evil is perpetuated and infects every newcomer.

The sales manager must not only watch for the development of any wrong tendency and check it in its incipiency, but must labor directly to inculcate right tendencies, high ideals, cheerfulness, and loyalty.

Every outward expression of a business is a reflection of something within, and any sales force must get right within itself before it can hope to be right and work in harmony with the other branches of the business and with the outside world.

The Impression of the Sales Force.

Business houses employing many salesmen may tremble to think of the good or bad impressions being continually multiplied and sent out from their sales departments. Proprietors may be totally unacquainted with that intangible but potent thing, the spirit of their sales force. They are not likely to see it as it impresses outsiders; or they may realize that it is wrong, and feel helpless to change it.

The necessity for a specific organization of sales departments in large institutions, giving the sole direction to a managing head, is responsible for the creation of the position of sales manager.

Primarily, the position of the sales manager is to stimulate enthusiatic devotion of all to the common cause. That is the thing which spells success. The contagious enthusiasm of a real leader of salesmen culminates when it is communicated to all the members of the sales force. It has then produced an army of doers.

The power to persuade others is, perhaps, the greatest faculty in salesmanship, just as the power to inspire others is the greatest faculty in successful leadership, and is the one thing to which the sales manager devotes his undivided attention in the management of his men.

No man should be at the head of a sales department who does not have this gift of leadership—the ability to inspire loyalty. The habit of loyalty must be established. Those who are not receptive, or incapable of it, must be weeded out.

The salesman who considers no one but himself, who is continually saying, "Where do I come in?" has a negative influence on any sales aggregation, and should be let out. When a salesman cannot be made to realize this, he had better quit and give both himself and his house a square deal. He does an injustice to himself, his managers, and his house when he continues in a position of lacking confidence in the institution and the men at the head of it.

Every salesman has an influence either for good or bad. If he cannot have a good influence he has no right to have a bad one.

CHAPTER XXII.

Getting an Interest in the Business.

Keep your eye on the finish.

Every man who sells things should be working for a purpose.

What is the desire of your heart and soul as a salesman? What is it that binds you down to years of tireless effort?

It is to succeed in the end. Am I not right?

You hope ultimately to secure an interest in the business. Your dominant aspiration is to have a partnership in the business which you have helped to build. It is not so?

The only way that that hope can ever be realized is by the principles of right salesmanship. There is no room in the stockholders' meeting or at the directors' board for negative salesmen.

By that I do not mean to say that all right salesmen eventually become employers. Good men, aye, first-class men, are to be found in every institution, who, for various reasons, do not seem to bend their energies in the direction of a partnership in the business; but for those who desire in the end to have a voice in the management through personal investment it can be obtained in no other way than through inherent quality of character in salesmanship.

Profit and prestige lie in positive and highly developed qualities of salesmanship, not in negative ones.

Successful men are men of quality.

Without equivocation I might say that salesmen lie closer to the hearts of proprietors than any other class of employes.

A Glance Behind the Scenes.

When at last you are invited to a place entitling you to share in the profits, what a mighty revelation the whole field of salesmanship becomes! A glance behind the scenes is sufficient to change your views completely. Getting an interest in the business—that is what opens the eyes of a salesman at last to many things that were difficult for him to understand when serving as a private in the ranks.

The head salesman in the house of wh ch I was a senior partner was a man of exceptional ability in many things, but he was generally to be found on the defensive where the policy of the house was a matter of question between the management and the sales force. Finally, opportunity was presented him to take a moneyed interest in the business. His certificates of stock had scarcely been transferred and duly recorded when he wanted to start reform measures on the other salesmen.

There is a certain code of ethics in every establishment governing salesmanship from the viewpoint of the house, and quite a different code from the viewpoint of the salesman.

Having worked my way from stock-boy to salesman, from salesman to buyer, from buyer to sales manager, and from sales manager to employer, I am prepared to say, without qualifying the statement, that the average employer's conception of true salesmanship is the correct form for any salesman to aspire to; and getting an interest in the business will confirm it beyond the shadow of a doubt.

Salesmen Become Proprietors.

Almost without exception, the histories of great business establishments reveal the truth of the assertion that the executive heads—the proprietors—were once salesmen. You have only to look to the past of the men at the head of the house whose goods you are selling to verify this statement.

Take cases like the Field establishment in Chicago, the greatest business house in the world. Marshall Field was himself a salesman; and that is also true of many of his partners and most of the army of the Field managers.

Find, if you can, one of the great manufactories or mercantile establishments, either wholesale or retail in any line, the world over—concerns that have emblazoned their names and trade marks around the circuit of the globe—and find one, if you can, that was not established and promoted to greatness by men who has once upon a time in their business careers sold things. What is true of Marshall Field is true of other merchants and manufacturers, great or small, in every line of trade.

When a salesman has ground out his task for a certain number of days, months, and years, he begins to ask himself where he is going, what he is doing, and—why he is doing it.

Young salesmen begin with enthusiasm, and gradually they settle down into the daily grind, relieved and rewarded now and then, if the results of their efforts justify such acknowledgment.

To the salesman who does not admit to himself that his daily work is a grind, who enters the race and sets his face resolutely toward the finish, never looking back, belong the rich prizes.

The Plodders' System.

The other class, men who have no set purpose in life at all, plod along bravely enough and without any real idea of giving up, and likewise without any real idea of where the journey of business life will lead them. Without the aid of business chart or compass, stopping along the way at times, they ask themselves if the game of salesmanship is worth while, and if they would not have done better to have entered some other field. To each the task that he is doing seems irksome and void of results. That is because his interest is not in his work.

Some one has said that the greatest hell one can suffer on earth is to lose interest in life.

Losing interest in business, looking back from the plough, means, first, decay, then stagnation, and finally retrogression—the beginning of the end.

Worth while or not isn't the question. We cannot run away from our allotted task in life whether we think it is worth while or not. The only men who have tried it successfully are professional hoboes; and salesmen who have endeavored to improve their condition and relieve their minds on the subject by constantly changing about in a vain attempt to locate the star of business success eventually become salesmen hoboes.

Look at the Bright Side.

The best thing for us all to do is to look at the bright side of things where we are.

There are two ways to contemplate our work. It is neither bright nor black but as the eyes of the onlooker make it so.

Men who sell things are divided into two classes—those who regard their work with rebellious eyes that do not understand, and those who view their work with a mind that rises above conditions and makes the best of them.

When Lincoln freed the negroes from slavery, a great army was necessary. Every man of that army, of course, wanted and hoped to be an officer; every man would have liked to do the work that Lincoln was doing.

No man should be blamed for having high aspirations, for wanting to be more important; but any man should be despised for refusing to do the humble work of which he is capable, because he has not been made commander-in-chief.

The Highest Salesman.

The highest salesman is he who does the lowliest thing well.

We know that, important as Lincoln was, the thousands of brave men who followed his generals in the field of battle were, as a body, infinitely more important. They could have done great things, finding other leaders, perhaps, without Lincoln. Lincoln could have done nothing without them.

The fight that Lincoln and his followers began against the Secessionists a little more than forty years ago is the same fight that the men who sell things must continuously wage against negative qualities in salesmanship, personal weaknesses, competition, and whatever set-backs may be encountered.

In the great panorama of the business world a few names stand out. We see and admire individuals, great business leaders; but the power that controls the entire field of business activity, and has brought business up to where one feature alone, freight by rail, measured in ton-miles, has increased three hundred and fifty per cent. in twenty years, exceeding by far the most optimistic railroad president's dreams—that power is the army of Men Who Sell Things.

In salesmanship it is essential that all grades of men be associated among the beginners. Time only can be depended upon in the necessary weeding process which shall determine the successful among the many. It is the beginner who is the most susceptible to the influence of bad advice.

Let the young salesman who finds himself among the small worries of his environment stop and take stock of himself and his position. If in the beginning he could feel that he was choosing wisely the field of salesmanship, surely he cannot so stultify his first judgment as to weigh it against the influence of another beginner who may have had less experience, and who he knows has far less judgment than himself. Yet this is the one thing which all his nature may prompt him to do.

The Young Salesman's Weakness.

One of the especial weaknesses of the young salesman lies in expecting too much of his house. He must recover himself and get back his sense of proportion which shall guide him sanely in his expectations. Then, having it, he can do no better than to be guided by this new judgment, keeping his own counsel.

There is no surer measure of a salesman's resources and strength than his ability to move and judge for himself.

If the young salesman will begin this course, merely, he must find it redounding to his every interest in business.

I have little more to say. If I have appeared to be harsh in my treatment of the subject, the apparent harshness has emanated wholly from a desire to paint a faithful and true picture of both the negative and positive phases of our great profession as I have come to know them.

A thorn in the flesh hurts; pulling it out hurts still more; but leaving it in to fester and poison hurts most of all. The pain is severe when the foreign substance is being removed, but that is the only way that health and life can be insured. The thorn out, the wound quickly heals.

Taking the Telling End.

The whole problem of negative salesmanship looks to me like the manner in which the farmer killed a neighbor's dog. The farmer was walking down the roadway, whistling a merry tune. A pitchfork was carelessly slung over his shoulder. As he was passing a neighbor's house, a big and vicious dog, with ears back and teeth showing, jumped out and showed fight. The farmer took down his fork and rammed it through the dog, killing him on the spot.

The neighbor, coming from a field close by and seeing his dog dead, exclaimed, "Oh, you have killed my dog! Why didn't you take the other end of the fork to him?"

The farmer calmly replied, "If your dog had come at me with the other end, I would." And he went on his way.

Hundreds of men who are selling things now will some day doubtless be employing salesmen themselves. You can see it by studying their faces, their actions, the quiet, determined, resolute manner of the one who is sure that one day he will have an interest in the business in which he is now employed, or be in business for himself, and make a success of it.

Business is a great battlefield, and therefore, roughly speaking, several million men who sell things, surging backward and forward over its surface, fighting for success. Each has a separate little battle of his own.

One side of the business battlefield is black, while one side is bright. May the readers of this book try to look always upon the bright side, patient in their hard work, without losing ambition. And may many of them change their present position in the ranks for a higher and more responsible one in the officers' quarters that will give them a chance to do more and better work.

Work is all there is in a man.

THE END.

SUCCESSFUL SELLING.

Really successful salesmanship is only possible when the salesman is assisted by persistent publicity. Publicity is the force behind the man which helps in promoting business for the salesman to go out and close. The best kind of publicity for the salesman's purpose is that which is centered exclusively on the salesman's possible customers. For obtaining this kind of publicity there is nothing equal to a trade newspaper which has the whole confidence of thousands of readers. Such a paper is justly regarded by its readers as an authority upon trade matters and is relied upon accordingly. Naturally, advertising appearing in such a paper carries the weight of the paper's reputation with it.

CO-OPERATIVE ASSOCIATION COMPLETING ORGANIZATION.

The Dominion Co-operative Association, with headquarters at Toronto, have held several meetings during the last few days, at which the charter of the organization was presented and the prospectus of the company, which has just been printed, approved. After the reading of the company contracts, the citizens' organization, consisting of about one hundred gentlemen, was formed. Since then several public gatherings have been held in various parts of the city with encouraging results. A Ladies' Co-Operative Guild has been organized numbering some sixty ladies. This guild is meeting every Wednesday. H. Macdonald, secretary, says that the purpose of the association is to organize a co-operative company on purely English lines and in affiliation with the International Co-Operative Alliance, of which His Excellency Earl Grey is the president, and to open a central store in Toronto and branches to serve each district in the city and suburbs. Subsequently branches will be established in every locality of the Dominion. When the distribution side is fully taken up and met the association will then consider and advance the organization of the production. The promoters met last week and allotted the stock already subscribed and this week the directors meet again to discuss the management of the company and the date for commencing business. The initial authorized capital is one million dollars, divided into two hundred thousand shares of the par value of five dollars per share, all of which is to be fully paid on allotment or in such instalments as the directors may require. There is no personal liability in connection with the stock. The prospectus of the company was issued this week and a large number of copies have been distributed.

The milk dealers have formed an association in Guelph for the purpose of better carrying on the delivery of this commodity and to eventually have Government inspection. They have rented a store on Quebec Street and intend to make this their headquarters. The idea of raising the price is not supposed at present to be a factor in the case.

Laying Foundations in Dairy Industry

What One Man, M. Moyer, Now Treasurer of the Ontario Board of the Retail Merchants' Association, Has Done to Bring the Butter and Egg Business of Canada to a Paying Basis—A Story of Early Struggle and Achievement.

Established the first creamery in Canada in 1876.

Laid the foundation of the Farmers' Institute by addressing public meetings in school houses.

Began the agitation for high-class butter and broke up the old system of the same price for all kinds.

Established the fact that creamery butter would bring more per pound than any other make.

Introduced the deep setting system of securing cream, thus replacing the old style of separating the cream from milk placed in shallow pans.

Inaugurated the agitation for refrigerator cans and cold storage on ocean boats to facilitate the shipment of butter and eggs to England.

Started the first butter and egg business in Toronto in 1887, dealing in superior articles and securing the trade of the best people.

Invented the one-pound model, which is now so generally used and has been in service for twenty years without a single improvement.

Was instrumental in having eggs shipped to Toronto by the farmers regularly every week, instead of being sent every month or just when it suited the convenience of the men and women in the country.

Won during eighteen years in the retail business the reputation of carrying the best butter and eggs in Toronto.

What One Man Has Done.

The foregoing are some of the outstanding reforms fostered by M. Moyer, Toronto, who is a prominent member of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada. The recital of what he has accomplished reads more like fiction than actual facts.

In blazing the path for improved quality and standard in butter he had many difficulties to contend with, much criticism to suffer and strenuous work, work which taxed the man to the utmost and was not adequately appreciated.

The Canadian people certainly owe a debt of gratitude to Mr. Moyer, who has spent the greater part of his life in the interest of a great public cause, at no small personal sacrifice.

Strenuous Early Days.

Mr. Moyer was born in Waterloo County, and is a descendant of the first Pennsylvania German settlers. His early days were spent on the farm and at school during the winter. At the age of eighteen he secured a third-class certificate and was a most successful school teacher for six years.

In 1874 he began business in the village of Breslaw, near Berlin, in a good farming section. At that time nearly all store goods were paid for in butter and eggs. The facilities, which the farmers used for making butter were wretched, and the product itself was in the same condition. One price was invariably paid for butter, no matter whether it was good, bad or indifferent.

Awakening to the Situation.

"On one occasion," remarked Mr. Moyer to The Canadian Grocer, "I had several hundred tubs of butter in the cellar and was asked by a friend in Toronto to send him a good tub for table use. I could not, because I had not one that I could conscientiously recommend. From that moment I made up my mind that something must be done. I declared that here is an article which should bring in a great revenue, but, for lack of better facilities and want of system, the country was losing millions of dollars annually.

The First Beginning.

"I started out on missionary work by calling meetings in schoolhouses and addressing the farmers on this very important industry. In one winter I had

M. MOYER,
Of Toronto, Who Has Done Much to Develop the Canadian Dairying Industry.

forty-eight meetings with very good results which formed the nucleus of the Farmers' Institutes, which have done much good and are popular to-day. Not being able to make much headway by theory alone, I had to make a practical demonstration by building and starting the first creamery in Canada, and, as far as I then knew, in the world.

"In this work I received very little sympathy, not even from the farmers, who were more or less affected with a sort of selfish pride that this was admitting they did not understand their own business. The women, who were led to believe by the storekeepers who wanted their trade, that their butter was first class, were particularly indignant about my attack on the butter-making by the farmers of our country.

"During my first year's experience," continued Mr. Moyer, "in meeting all kinds of unforeseen difficulties, I came out with a loss of about $3,000, but sold the butter I made for 10c a pound more than I received for my store butter. Even with this loss I demonstrated the fact that well-made butter would bring the price, and this difference would mean millions to the country.

New Separating System.

"I now had to cut down expenses and instead of bringing all the milk to the creamery I came to the conclusion that the cream only should be brought. To do this the entire system of separating the cream had to be changed. The only way they separated then was by allowing it to stand in shallow pans or crocks. By this process it was impossible to get clean cream, free from taint. I then introduced the deep-setting system, which entirely displaced the pans and was universally adopted, and increased the yield of cream from each cow to the extent of at least $5 a year. With an average of about 25,000 cows in each county this in itself was a marvelous gain to the farmer. With this improved system it was possible to get the cream in good shape and the cost of the creamery was reduced to a paying basis. As our cities were then not so large they were supplied with butter from their immediate neighborhoods, and our creamery butter was all shipped to England.

Laying Foundations for Export Business.

"Here again I met with a serious difficulty. We had no refrigerator cars, nor any provision on the boats to protect our butter from heat, and, in consequence, suffered repeated losses. The matter was brought to the attention of the proper authorities but it took nearly 20 years for that necessity to be supplied."

The life struggle of Mr. Moyer furnishes many other stirring incidents. Speaking of the development along another line he said: "To obviate the necessity of butter being dug out of tubs I invented the 1 lb. model, which is ever since almost universally used, and which was so complete and convenient, that it has now been in use for twenty years without a single improvement."

Possessed of a public spirit and progressive ideals, Mr. Moyer has always taken great interest in the Retail Merchants' Association. On several occasions he has, with a few other members, represented that body at large conventions in the United States and also at various wholesale gatherings in leading Canadian cities. He is at present the treasurer of the Ontario Provincial Board of the Association.

CHEESE AND BUTTER BULLETIN

Montreal, Nov. 5, 1908.

The butter situation presents a fairly good outlook now, for the last month of the season. The long drought has been effectually broken by copious rains, and the pastures are presenting a fairly good appearance for this time of the year. It looks now as though the season would be a better one than last year, if the weather conditions remain normal. The chief item of interest during the week has been the active demand which has come from the other side of the ocean. This is about the season for Australian and New Zealand butter to arrive in London, but so far arrivals have been so small that they cannot be relied upon, consequently inquiries have been coming in this direction from London, and other British points. The arrivals of Siberian and Irish butter are becoming less every day in the English market. All of these conditions have had a tendency to advance the market. The prospects are regarded as good by British houses for trade between Canada and England for some time to come. In addition to this there has been shipments to points in the west to fill immediate requirements. Some time ago there was a prophecy made that butter would be high during the winter, but subsequent events seemed to indicate that such would not be the case, however, the shortage in England and shortage here together with the slowness of the Australian and New Zealand arrivals point to a higher market on this side of the Atlantic. It might be stated here, that these remarks apply only to the high grade lines, as there seems to be a sufficient quantity of low-grade butter on the English market.

Advices from Australia and New Zealand state that there will be a good yield in those countries if nothing abnormal occurs. So far, however, the yield has not been up to expectations, but this is said to be the fault of the English buyers rather than the Antipodean producers, because it is alleged the Englishmen have anticipated the market too early in the season. In looking over the figures of imports into England it is shown, that they are in excess of previous years. It must be remembered, however, that this is the case owing to the increased influx into England this year of visitors, who have been drawn there by the exceptional attractions which London has been offering tourists this year. Reports state that fancy prices have been paid for the Australian stock which is on its way to London. By some, the prices are regarded as a bit venturesome, but this can only be determined on later on.

The country boards are stronger all around, which, taken in conjunction with the increased inquiry from the Old Country, has imparted a strong tone locally to the market. Receipts for the season up to the date, Oct. 31, are 370,763 packages, against 364,778 packages for the corresponding period last year. From these figures it will be seen that the yield is 5,985 packages ahead of the total receipts for the same period of last year. If the present favorable conditions continue it is thought this lead will be substantially increased.

Total shipments up-to-date since May 1 are 92,656 packages, as against 66,766 packages for the corresponding period of last year. It will be seen that the exports also are in advance of last year's figures. Prices rule 26c to 26½c for finest creamery in round lots, and 27c to 27½c in a jobbing way.

The cheese market has suddenly recovered itself and last week's dullness and apathy has changed to firmness and interest in the market. The prospects of a considerable shortage are good as compared with last year's record. The time which is now left of the season is so short that it would be impossible even under the best of conditions to overtake last year's record.

The following are expressions of opinions from various points in England. Reports from Liverpool state: "There is little change to report. Holders are very firm and confident, and while the demand is quiet yet the disposition is to hold for former quotations, but Cheshire cheese being slightly lower the market is a shade in buyers' favor, but holders are not pressing sales as supplies are limited. Quotations are: Finest cheese, 60s 6d, to 61s; good value about 1s less."

From Manchester comes word that: "Cheshire cheese ruled decidedly slow, buyers showing very little inclination to buy at all forward. What business there was ran on fancy qualities, and these changed hands at last week's prices. Canadians slow, and to induce trade holders offered at 1s less than last week, with only moderate results. Quotations: Choicest Cheshire, 65s, 67s 6d; fine, 60s, 62s 6d; common, 52s 6d, 57s 6d. Canadian finest, 61s 6d, 62s; fine, 60s, 60s 6d."

Reports from Bristol say: "Cables from Canada this week showed a disposition to accept slightly easier rates, but the response from this side did not indicate any very great eagerness on the part of importers to avail themselves of the opportunity, owing to the extreme dullness of demand on this side. Today, however, the tone is firmer, and there is a little more disposition to operate. On spot values have held their own—fine white fetching 60s, 60s 6d, and finest 61s, 62s."

From Newcastle-on-Tyne reports say that: "Poor demand has taken place for Canadians. Holders have given way 1s to effect sales, prices generally having been from 62s to 63s."

Receipts of cheese up to Oct. 31 since May 1 have been 1,764,735 boxes, against 1,932,771 boxes for the same period last year. These figures show a deficit of 168.036 boxes to be made up before the close of the season.

The total exports since May 1 up to the present time have been 1,644,325 boxes, against 1,877,814 boxes for the same period of last year. Here again it is shown there has been a falling off. Locally the prices range from 12½c to 12⅝c for Westerns, and 12c to 12¼c for Easterns.

THE PROVISION SITUATION

Toronto, Nov. 5, 1908.

"Good business at home, and little going forward," is the report made generally by Canadian packers this week. The good demand in Canada at this season is the only thing that redeems the situation, and if it were not for this the packers would be rather hard hit.

The British market stands this week at 55 to 56 shillings. It is being kept well supplied with Danish and Irish bacon, so that there is little call for the Canadian product. The English packers, too, seem to be rather active this season and thus, though not a large factor, helps to swell the supply and to keep the market down.

The British demand, also, is rather materially lighter this season than usual. Thousands of factory operatives and laborers in different parts of the empire are and have been out of employment, and are said to be living on rather cheaper food than pork products. This is having an appreciable effect on the situation.

A report from P. B. McNamara, Canadian trade commissioner in Manchester, in the current weekly report of the Department, confirms the summary that has been made from time to time in these columns.

"It is, perhaps, to be regretted," the commissioner says, "that the Canadian pork packers had not more of their products to place upon the English market during the months of August and September, as the selling price ruled high. The trade, however, on this side understand that the diminished shipments are due to the high prices of hogs, which has rendered the trade so unprofitable. At the moment of writing, values have subsided, and plentiful supplies of Danish, Irish and English bacon are sufficient to meet all buyers' requirements. The reduced shipments of bacon from the States are making very little difference to the price, and it is fortunate that they are not more, otherwise there would have been an inevitable slump. It is confidently expected that the supply of hogs, both in Ireland and England will be very large, and prices are very reasonable. This must have an effect on the future, and though naturally the months of October and November are not plentiful months for American and Canadian bacon, there is a strong indication of lower prices ahead."

The packers continue to report favorably regarding business in Canada. Demand continues exceedingly good, and with the approach of the close of navigation the call for supplies for lumber and construction camps is quite active.

The run of hogs the past week has been fairly good, though the especially large deliveries usually made about this time has not materialized. Prices are on the same basis as last week, viz., $5.75 f.o.b., and $7.10 fed and watered.

The New York Journal of Commerce in its weekly review of the United States markets, says :

"In spite of the promises of the early part of last week there is no apparent let-up in the number of hogs being rushed to market. They are still far below the normal as to weight and condition, and efforts to better the situation seem to be revolving around a circle. Farmers say they cannot afford to feed corn at the present prices of corn and of hogs, wh le packers decline to pay higher prices until the hogs are corn-fed. The better grades of hog products are therefore becoming less plentiful, while lard is running short to a serious degree. Nevertheless some of the provision traders who claim to have been very correct in their market views are now advising caution on the buying side. The advance, they say, has been radical from the low point and it is not generally regarded as the right season to embark on a bull campaign. Packers, it is said, are suspected of releasing a little product quietly from time to time, and with the dull tone of the cash trade, the heavy hog run, and the large long interests thought to exist, it is predicted that a sharp reaction is due. How nearly correct this view may be remains to be demonstrated, but the speculative market has shown a number of ups and downs during the week that indicate its extreme sensitiveness."

PROVISIONS—The market is slightly easier, supplies of a number of lines in which there is good demand becoming materially larger recently. In consequence there has been a decline of from a half to a cent on long clears, smoked and rolls. Lard remains at about the same figure. Put a strong glass on the label and examine it closely every time. Always look for the name "Gillett's."

Like all good articles, which are extensively advertised, Gillett's Lye is frequently and very closely imitated. In some instances the imitators have actually copied directions and other printed matter from our label word for word. Be wise, and refuse to purchase imitation articles for they are never satisfactory.

Insist On Getting Gillett's Lye

and decline to accept anything that looks to be an imitation or that is represented to be "just as good" or "better," or "the same thing." In our experience of over fifty years in business we have never known of an imitation article that has been a success, for imitators are not reliable people. At the best the "just as good" kinds are only trashy imitations, so decline them with thanks every time.

THE FLOUR AND CEREAL MARKETS

The Situation Remains Generally Steady With Prices Unchanged in All Lines—Outlook for Higher Flour During the Winter.

The flour and cereal markets generally show little change from the situation noted a week ago.

Business in flour continues exceedingly good and millers everywhere are being kept busy looking after local orders. Local business is so good, indeed, that export demand is being rather neglected. Pr ces continue firm and in the face of the present market tone there is a feeling in some quarters that flour may advance within the next month or so.

Cereal manufacturers report business rather more active than for three or four weeks past. Some attribute this to the colder weather, others to the fact that retailers' stocks have gotten low and they are forced to buy. Some attention is being paid to the export of rolled oats and oatmeal.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR—There has been some inquiry from England during the last week, but no sales of any magnitude have taken place. The demand in the country is becoming somewhat better. Stocks on the spot are low and stocks held in the country are also at a low ebb.

EDUCATING GROCERS IN ENGLAND

Institute of Certified Retailers Formed to Protect Members of Trade.

In England it is contended that too many retail grocers are incompetent and, therefore, unable to conduct the business as it should be. A plan has been started to make grocers by education and to issue certificates the same to be recognized as credentials of competency. There has been formed what is known as the Institute of Certified Grocers, at the head of which is Sir Wm. Anson, Bart., M.P. The idea of the institute is to link up permanently those young men in the grocery trade who have gone through a course of technical instruction and gained certificates and diplomas awarded by a national committee, thus bringing into existence a class of trained assistants able to point to recognized credentials of their qualifications as grocers.

The committee who have been promoting this movement for the last two and a half years have resolved themselves into the council of the institute pro tem., and included thereon are representative educationalists. There are three grades of membership.

The poll will begin with the names of the 175 young men who have already gained certificates, those being classed as associates, while those who are successful in gaining the diplomas to be awarded in connection with the national examination held at the Grocers' Exhibition will become members of the institute.

It is also proposed, it is understood, to create fellows of the institute from among those gentlemen who are actively associated with the movement. The first public meeting under the auspices of the institute will be held in January next.

GUILD CASE RESUMED NEXT TUESDAY.

The case against the Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Guild, the sitting on which was adjourned on Friday, Oct. 23, will be resumed next Tuesday, Nov. 10, before Chief Justice Falconbridge in the City Hall, Toronto, at 11 o'clock.

New Companies.

A charter has been granted to the Davies Brewery Co., Limited, with head offices in Toronto. The share capital is $50,000 and the provisional directors are Franklin Jones Davies, Robert Henry Smith and Edward Adamson. The company is empowered to purchase the assets, rights goodwill, buildings and plant of the Davies Brewing Co.

STAPLE PRICES AND STABLE PROFITS.

The grocery trade has enjoyed the profits in the past on a great many articles that would have continued selling and continued to make profits for grocers if it had not been for the "cutting and slashing," and the inciting to competition and confusion that such a policy always creates.

Stable prices mean stable profits for all. The day is close at hand, if it has not already arrived, when the retail and jobbing trade will begin war among themselves on milk as a result of the incentive that these irregular prices provide.

What happens then? One brand after another goes down in the conflict and the grocers have disturbed the stability of their trade, and in the readjustment have spent more effort than they would have spent by sticking to the sale of stable brands.

They find the reconstructive period with its remnant stock sales, its "dead ones" to be sold at a sacrifice, a very serious condition to master.

Remember the breakfast food wars. Who got the worst of them? The grocer and the "slasher."—Exchange.

FRUITS, VEGETABLES AND FISH

Thanksgiving Demand is Being Felt— Foreign Fruits Taking a Large Place— Fish Business Brisk.

Cooler weather and an anticipation of good demand among Thanksgiving buyers is keeping business brisk in the wholesale fruit markets this week. After the long, busy summer, with its very heavy supplies of Canadian fruit, it is rather a novelty to see the market bare of these goods. Pears are still on and will be in evidence for several weeks yet and there is a smattering of quinces and very few grapes, but this beyond apples, completes the list and even the goods mentioned are not at all in evidence.

Florida oranges are coming in quite freely and are selling fairly well, the holiday trade providing a little more than ordinary demand. Verdelli lemons are becoming a little more scarce but new Messinas are coming in. Cape Cod cranberries are being held very high by the growers, and in consequence there is rather greater call than usual for Canadian berries.

Lines of the less hardy vegetables are gradually disappearing from the market and more demand is being felt for imported stock. The market is a little firmer this week and there is rather more call for New Brunswick supplies.

This week sees the last of fresh lake fish for the present, close season coming into effect on Nov. 1. As a result business in these lines is brisk. General business is opening up well, and there are few changes to record.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS—The fruit market is somewhat easier this week owing to increased supplies. Floridas are now being quoted at $3.50. Grape fruit is selling at $4.50. Verdelli lemons are lower in some lines, being quoted at $2.75. California pears are also easier at $3.50. Other lines remain the same as last quoted.

TORONTO.

GREEN FRUITS—A brisk demand in anticipation of Thanksgiving is keeping business active in the wholesale houses this week. Some attention is being paid to Florida oranges, which are arriving in good quantity and in good condition, but more interest is displayed in Almeria grapes which are passing off nicely. Consumption of this delicacy seems to be increasing materially of late years. New Messina lemons were brought in by a couple of houses this week and these are drawing interest to some extent from the Verdellis. Grape fruit is being bought to some extent but pineapples are going rather slowly as yet though the quality is excellent.

A. H. Brittain & Co., representing the Atlantic Fish Companies, are putting out a very neat little booklet containing much information in regard to the many and varied dishes which can be prepared from their products. The booklet also gives an account of the curing of their fish in the many stations which they own, and a few good recipes for properly cooking fish in many delectable ways. They also invite housekeepers who have good methods of preparing fish to contribute the same in order that they may be published.

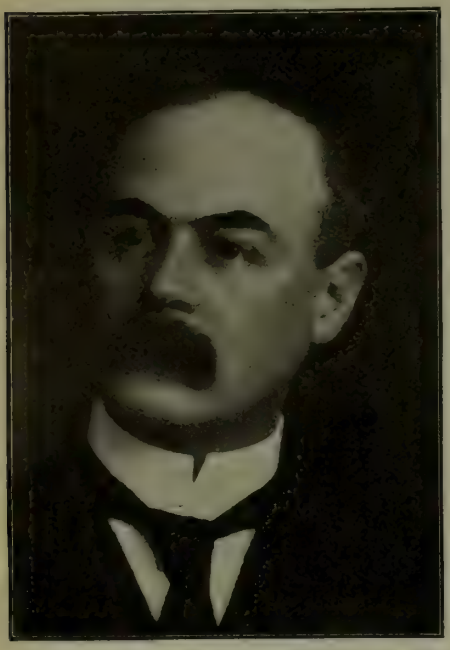
THE DAWSON COMMISSION CO., TORONTO

NEW TRADE COMMISSIONER IN SCOTLAND.

W. G. Fischer, of Toronto, Will Look After Canada's Interests in Glasgow.

"My business will be to increase Canadian exports in Scotland and to see that the sales of Canadian manufactured products are facilitated and developed in that country." said Wm. G. Fischer, of Toronto, who has just been appointed Canadian Trade Commissioner, with headquarters at Glasgow.



W. G. FISCHER.

Canada's New Trade Commissioner in Glasgow.

Mr. Fischer will sail from Montreal on the 24th inst., on the S.S. Corsican, and, after spending a few days in Liverpool and at the High Commissioner's office in London, he will proceed direct to Glasgow.

Mr. Fischer will select his own staff in Glasgow and immediately set to work to ascertain what the Scotch need and what Canada can best supply, not only in the line of foodstuffs, but in manufactured articles.

Mr. Fischer mentioned several lines of goods for which he thought a suitable market might be developed in Scotland. He said that wooden ware, for instance, had a good sale in England, and apparently a fair demand for it might be created in the land o' cakes.

W. G. Fischer is a native of Berlin, Waterloo County, receiving his education in the High school there, and the Collegiate Institute, Toronto. In 1878 he started to learn the leather business, and was with Beardmore & Co., Front Street, Toronto, for several years. He was on the road for some time, and in 1885 he became associated with the late John Hallam, as manager. He greatly increased the business and, when Mr. Hallam died, he continued the establishment in his own name for a number of years. He is a pleasant, earnest and progressive man of affairs and possesses a wide acquaintance with business men in Canada, through his connection with the hide and leather trade with which he has been prominently identified for thirty years. He will return to Toronto in March, when he will remove his wife and family to Glasgow.

Mr. Fischer's many friends are confident that he will succeed in his new post and will show excellent results.

HINTS TO BUYERS.

Reading notices under this heading will be accepted at 10 cents per agate line.

Brandology is a specially coined word introduced recently in the United States and which signifies the science of selecting goods by name. It enables the consumer to discriminate between good and bad, and enables him to buy at any time and at any place, goods of a certain quality which please him. A manufacturer or dealer who places his name on a certain line of goods puts his reputation at stake and he must therefore see that the goods bearing his name are always as represented. It is not surprising, therefore, that when a firm of the reputation and importance of Laporte, Martin & Co., Montreal, place their name under the brands of "Princess" and "Victoria" black and Japan teas these teas are as good as can be bought for the price. Their name under these brand names means purity and quality; it means that every package contains a tea of unvarying quality, strength and goodness. Dealers selling "Princess" and "Victoria" brands of teas can feel satisfied that they are selling teas which their customers will appreciate and adopt.—Advt.

A Dominion Government bulletin recently issued gives some interesting figures regarding the magnitude of the dairy interest in Peterboro county during the season of 1907. There were 144,516 pounds of butter manufactured with an estimated value of $36,660 and 3,510,097 pounds of cheese valued at $406,310, making a total of $442,970. The total number of cheese factories was 40, making an average of $110,742,50 per factory.

THE GROCER'S ENCYCLOPEDIA

Useful Information for Grocers and Clerks That Will Help in Making Sales.

A summary of the world's harvest and consumption of cocoa for 1907 has just been made by the Gordian, of Hawbury. According to its calculations the total of the harvest was about 1,480,000 tons, a drop of about 6,000 tons, as compared with 1906, but a considerable increase on the harvest of any recent year, except the record year 1904, when the production exceeded one and a half millions. Had the return for Ecuador and the Dominion Republic been up to the normal, even the record of 1904 would have gone by the board, but on these two there was a decrease of 80,000 tons. For many years Ecuador stood at the head of the cocoa producing countries, but since 1904 it has given place to Brazil and San Thomas. Of the British Colonies, Trinidad comes in the fourth place, while the sixth is occupied by British West Africa. The latter has developed probably more quickly than any of the other cocoa countries. In 1902 the export from the Gold Coast and Lagos totalled only 27,000 while in 1907 this had increased to over 100,000! As the cultivation of cocoa is being steadily extended in the territories of the Gold Coast, of Lagos, and of Southern Nigeria, it is evident that our West African possessions are destined to play a more and more important part in the world's production. The world's consumption is reckoned at 1,550,000 tons, which shows a slight increase over last year's record figures. Five years ago the consumption barely exceeded one million tons, and there is an actual rise in consumption of about 40 per cent. in that period. During the same period the increase in production has been only 20 per cent., and during the last two years the consumption has been in excess of production. Consequently the world supply, which showed a steady increase in the stocks on hand up to the end of 1905, has fallen materially. Then it stood at 600,000 tons, representing 42 per cent. of the annual consumption. Two years later, at the end of 1907, it is estimated at 417,000 tons or just over 30 per cent. of the annual consumption. Of the four great cocoa-consuming countries, the United States, Germany, France and England, the last named shows a small increase in the consumption of 1907 as compared with the previous year, while the other three show a fall. Holland and Switzerland also show increases. According to the report, 1907 was a bad year for the cocoa manufacturers and 1908 is not likely to be a good one, although there is a prospect of the world's production showing a decided overplus over its consumption.

How Coffee Was Discovered.

Somewhere about the middle of the fifteenth century (it is recorded) a poor Arab was traveling through Abyssinia, and finding himself weary and weak from fatigue, he stopped near a grove. Then, being in want of fuel to cook his rice, he cut down a tree which happened to be covered with dead berries. His meal being cooked and eaten, the traveler discovered that the half-burned berries were very fragrant. He collected a number of these, and, on crushing them with a stone, he found that their aroma increased to a great extent. While wondering at this he accidentally let fall the substance in a can which contained his scanty supply of water. The nearly putrid water was almost instantly purified. He brought it to his lips. It was fresh, agreeable, and in a moment the traveler had so far recovered his strength and energy as to be able to resume his journey.

The lucky Arab gathered as many berries as he could, and, having arrived at Aden, in Arabia, he informed the mufti of his discovery. That worthy divine was an inveterate opium-smoker, who had been suffering for years from the influence of that poisonous drug. He tried an infusion of the roasted berries, and was so delighted at the recovery of his own vigor that, in gratitude to the tree, he called it cahuah, which in Arabia signifies force.

Cuba's Sugar Factories.

The Cuban Bureau of Agriculture says that for the year 1906-7 there were 186 sugar factories in operation, five more than in the previous year and seven more than in the season of 1904-5.
